MEANING OF TERMS

USED IN CLASSIFYING ANNOTATING CASES.

THE different expressions used to describe the effect of the annotating cases have the following meanings, and the classification of the annotating cases has been done strictly in accordance with these meanings. The annotating cases, except such as are classified as "Mentioned," are grouped according to the points in the case which they annotate: within these groups they are listed chronologically, except such as are classified as "Referred to," which come at the end of the group and are arranged inter se in chronological order. Cases which annotate the annotated case generally are grouped together after cases which annotate specific points, similarly arranged, and are followed by cases classified as "Mentioned" arranged chronologically inter se. The terms used in classifying the annotating cases are as follows:—

"APPLIED" (Apld.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the principle of law enunciated in the annotated case has been applied to a new set of facts and circumstances in the annotating case.

"APPROVED" (Apprvd.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the annotated case has been considered to be good law in the annotating case where the latter is in a higher court than the former.

"CONSIDERED" (Consd.).—This expression is used where the remarks in the annotating case are devoid of adverse criticism and merely denote the giving of more or less careful consideration to the annotated case.

"DISTINGUISHED" (Distd.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but where some essential difference (either on the facts or in law) between it and the annotated case is pointed out.

"DOUBTED" (Dbtd.).—This expression is used where the court in the annotating case without definitely going to the length of saying that the annotated case is wrong, adduces reasons which seem to show that it is not accurate.

"EXPLAINED" (Expld.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but the decision arrived at is justified or accounted for by calling attention to some point of fact or of law which is usually, but not necessarily, one not obvious on the face of the report.

"EXTENDED" (Extd.).—Compare "APPLIED," supra.

"FOLLOWED" (Folld.).—This expression is used to denote that the same principles of law are applied in the two cases. It does not necessarily imply that the facts are substantially identical in the two cases.

"NOT FOLLOWED" (N.F.).—Compare "FOLLOWED," supra, to which it is the adverse.

"OVERRULED" (Overd.).—This expression is used where the annotating case is on substantially identical facts with the annotated case and in a higher court and the rule in the latter case is held to be wrong.

"REFERRED" (Refd.).—This expression is used only where the annotating case deals with the point of the Digest paragraph and is without comment of any definite character on the case annotated, and where there is no delicate shade of approval or disapproval which would justify the use of any of the foregoing words.

"MENTIONED" (Mentd.).—This expression is used only where none of the foregoing terms apply. In other words, it is used only where the case annotated is cited on a point having nothing to do with the point in the Digest paragraph.

Part I.—Contracts to Marry.

SECT. 1.—FORMATION OF.

SUB-SECT. 1.—MUTUALITY.

Formation of contracts generally, see CONTRACT, Vol. XII., pp. 51 et seq.

1. Necessity for.]—Actions would lie upon mutual promises of marriage.—COCK v. RICHARDS (1805), 10 Ves. 429; 32 E. R. 911, L. C.

2. ——.]—VINEALL v. VENESS, No. 3, post.

SUB-SECT. 2.—OFFER AND ACCEPTANCE.

3. General rule.]—In an action by a woman for breach of promise of marriage, it must appear, not only that deft. proposed, or even promised to marry pltf., but that she promised to marry deft.; for in this, as in all other cases, a contract must be mutual; &, although the assent to the engagement on both sides need not appear to have been strictly concurrent, it must appear to have been within a reasonable time.—VINEALL v. VENESS (1865), 4 F. & F. 344, N. P.

4. Acceptance on part of woman—Necessity for.]—In assumpsit by a woman for breach of a promise of marriage, it is enough to aver that she was semper parata, without saying obtulit se.

On promise that concerns marriage an action will lie (ATKINS, J.).—HOLCROFT v. DICKENSON (1673), Freem. K. B. 347; Cart. 233; 89 E. R. 258; sub nom. HOLDER v. DICKESON, Freem. K. B. 95; sub nom. DICKISON v. HOLCROFT, 3 Keb. 148.

Sect. 1.—Formation of: Sub-sects. 2 & 3. Sects. 2, 3 & 4: Sub-sects. 1 & 2.]

5. Inferred from conduct—Without proving express promise.]—An action on a promise of marriage may be maintained, without proving an express promise on the part of the woman.

There is no necessity of proving an actual promise on the woman's part; for it is sufficient evidence to show that she countenanced the promise & carried herself so as one who approved & consented to it (HOLT, C.J.).—HUTTON v. MANSELL (1705), 6 Mod. Rep. 172; Holt, K. B. 458; 3 Salk. 16, 64; 87 E. R. 928.

6. —— —— ——.]—In an action by a lady for a breach of promise of marriage, it is not necessary, for the purpose of making out the mutual promises, which are necessary to support the action, that pltf. by words consented to accept deft.; but the jury may infer such consent from the circumstances of her making no objection at the time of the offer, & her afterwards receiving visits from deft. in the capacity of a suitor.—DANIEL v. BOWLES (1826), 2 C. & P. 553, N. P.

7. Assent on both sides—Must be within reasonable time—Not necessarily concurrent.]—VINEALL v. VENESS, No. 3, ante.

Declarations to third parties—Whether amounting to promise to marry.]—See Sub-sect. 3, post.

SUB-SECT. 3.—DECLARATION OF INTENTION TO THIRD PARTIES.

8. Made to father of plaintiff—To marry daughter within time certain—Evidence of general promise.]—POTTER v. DEBOOS, No. 27, post.

General promises.]—See Sect. 5, sub-sect. 1, post.

9. Not uttered in presence of plaintiff—Or subsequently communicated.]—(1) An expression to third persons of an intention to marry another, not uttered in the hearing of or communicated to such person by the authority of the party expressing the intention, does not amount to a promise, so as to sustain an action.

(2) A statement, in the presence of a woman, of an intention to marry her as soon as her business is settled, must be laid as a conditional promise, & the condition must be shown to have been performed.—COLE v. COTTINGHAM (1837), 8 C. & P. 75, N. P.

SECT. 2.—FORM—STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

10. Not within Statute of Frauds—Distinguished from contracts in consideration of marriage.]—HARRISON v. CAGE, No. 26, post.

11. —— ——.]—Stat. Frauds extends only to contracts in consideration of marriage, & not contracts to marry.—CORK v. BAKER (1717), 1 Stra. 34; 93 E. R. 367.

12. —— ——.]—Stat. Frauds does not require promises of marriage to be in writing, but only money to be given in consideration of marriage (per CUR.).—ATKINS v. FAR (1738), West temp. Hard. 589; 1 Atk. 287; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 247; 25 E. R. 1100, L. C.

Annotations:—Refd. Cock v. Richards (1805), 10 Ves. 429. Mentd. Clarke v. Periam (1741), 2 Atk. 333; Woodhouse v. Shepley (1742), 2 Atk. 535.

Statute of Frauds generally, see CONTRACT, Vol. XII., pp. 118 et seq.

SECT. 3.—CONSIDERATION.

13. Sufficiency of—Going to particular place to marry promisor—Promise to marry within a reasonable time after arrival.]—In assumpsit upon a promise of marriage, the declaration, after alleging that pltf. was sole & unmarried, & resided in parts beyond the seas, stated that, "in consideration that pltf., at the request of deft., would go to L. for the purpose of marrying him, deft. promised pltf. to marry her in a reasonable time after her arrival at L." At the trial, the judge gave pltf. leave to amend the declaration, by stating the consideration thus—"in consideration that pltf., so then being sole & unmarried as aforesaid, at the request of deft., then promised deft. to marry him, & would go to L. for the purpose of marrying him, deft., & would, within a reasonable time of her arrival there, marry deft., he, deft., promised to marry her in a reasonable time after her arrival at L.":—Held: the consideration was sufficient as originally stated.—HARVEY v. JOHNSTON (1848), 6 C. B. 295; 6 Dow. & L. 120; 17 L. J. C. P. 298; 11 L. T. O. S. 244; 12 Jur. 981; 136 E. R. 1265.

Annotations:—Mentd. Duncan v. Topham (1849), 8 C. B. 225; British & American Telegraph Co. v. Colson (1871), L. R. 6 Exch. 108.

Agreement to remain unmarried—Promise by married man—Promisee ignorant of marriage.]—In assumpsit for breach of promise of marriage, the declaration stated, that in consideration that pltf., being sole & unmarried, at the request of deft. had promised deft. to marry deft. within a reasonable time, deft. promised pltf. to marry her within a reasonable time; that pltf., confiding in the promise of deft., had from thenceforward remained sole & unmarried, & had always, until she had notice that deft. was married, been ready & willing to marry him; that, although a reasonable time had elapsed since the making of deft.'s promise, yet deft. had not married pltf., but, on the contrary thereof, deft., at the time of making his promise, & from thenceforward, had been & still was, married; & that pltf. did not know, at the time of deft.'s making his said promise to her, nor for a long time afterwards, that deft. was married:—Held: (1) the declaration disclosed a sufficient consideration for deft.'s promise; (2) deft. could not set up the fraudulent concealment of his marriage in discharge of the liability arising on the promise so fraudulently made by him.—WILD v. HARRIS (1849), 7 C. B. 999; 7 Dow. & L. 114; 18 L. J. C. P. 297; 13 L. T. O. S. 283; 13 Jur. 961; 137 E. R. 395.

PART I. SECT. 2.

b. Not within Statute of Frauds—Engagement for a year.]—Pltf. swore "it was to be a year's engagement, & we were to be married in the following Aug.":—Held: not an agreement not to be performed within a year &, therefore, not void under the statute, although not in writing.—SMITH v. JAMIESON (1889), 17 O. R. 626.—CAN.

[illegible] v. DUFAULT (1923), 55 O. L. R. 90.—CAN.

d. Promise inferred from conduct.]—CHAPMAN v. SCOTT (1887), 31 L. C. J. 327.—CAN.

e. —— Whether writing necessary.]—A promise to marry may be made without words. The conduct demeanour, & behaviour of persons towards each other may constitute proof of a contract, but stronger evidence of the promise by the man should be required than that by the woman, & the inference of a promise on his part will not, in an equal degree be deduced from conduct only.—HICKEY v. CAMPION (1872), 20 W. R. 752.—IR.

15. —— .]—A declaration alleged, that, in consideration that pltf., at deft.'s request, promised to marry him, he promised pltf. to marry her. Averments: that pltf. hath continued & still is unmarried, & until the discovery of deft.'s marriage, was ready & willing to marry him; that, after deft.'s promise, pltf. discovered that deft., at the time of his promise, was, & still is, married, & that pltf. had not, at the time of deft.'s promise, any notice of deft.'s then marriage:—Held: the declaration was good; & pltf.'s remaining unmarried was a sufficient consideration to support deft.'s promise. Qu.: whether a promise by a married man to marry another woman after his wife's death, is void.—MILLWARD v. LITTLEWOOD (1850), 5 Exch. 775; 20 L. J. Ex. 2; 155 E. R. 339; sub nom. MILWARD v. LITTLEWOOD, 16 L. T. O. S. 128.

SUB-SECT. 2.—PROMISE BY INFANTS.

See, generally, INFANTS.

16. Right of infant to sue—Promise voidable only.]—(1) An infant may sue on a contract of marriage with a person of full age.

(2) The promise on the part of the infant carries with it an appearance of benefit to the infant, for which reason it is not void, but voidable only (per CUR.).

(3) Formerly it was made a doubt whether any action could be maintained on mutual promises to marry; but that is now a point not to be disputed. Such action will well lie; & that by the man as well as the woman (per CUR.).—HOLT v. WARD (1732), 2 Stra. 937; 1 Barn. K. B. 455; 2 Barn. K. B. 176; Fitz-G. 175, 275; 93 E. R. 954.

18. Effect of ratification after full age—Necessity for fresh promise—Infants Relief Act, 1874 (c. 62), s. 2.]—The above sect. applies to promise of marriage.

Deft., during his infancy, promised to marry pltf., &, after coming of age, recognised without expressly repeating the promise, & eventually broke it. Pltf. sued him for the breach, & was nonsuited:—Held: the nonsuit was right; for, assuming that there was a ratification of the promise subsequent to his majority, the right of action upon such ratification was taken away by above sect., & there was no evidence of any fresh promise made after deft. came of age.—COXHEAD v. MULLIS (1878), 3 C. He afterwards gave her an engaged ring, which she wore; & two days before he attained his majority he went into the country to visit his father, & on his return, the day after he came of age, he saw pltf. & told her that he had explained all to his father, & that he assented to the engagement, adding, "Now I may & will marry you as soon as I can":—Held: it was properly left to the jury to say whether this was a fresh absolute promise to marry, or merely a ratification of the original promise made during infancy, so as to be avoided by the operation of above sect.—NORTHCOTE v. DOUGHTY (1879), 4 C. 20. —.]—In July, 1875, the pltf. & deft., both being then under the age of twenty-one, mutually agreed to marry one another. The engagement continued without any definite understanding as to when the marriage was to take place until Mar. 1879, when, both having attained the age of twenty-one, deft. asked pltf., in the presence of her father, to fix the wedding day. She fixed it for June 5, to which deft. assented; but ultimately he broke his promise. In an action for this breach of promise, in which it was agreed that the damages should be assessed, subject to the opinion of the ct. as to whether or not that which took place in Mar. 1879, was evidence from which the jury might & ought to infer a fresh promise to marry after deft. had attained twenty-one, within above sect., or a mere ratification of the original void promise:—Held: what took place in Mar. 1879, when the wedding day was fixed, was a fresh promise made after deft. came of age, & upon a good consideration.—DITCHAM v. WORRALL (1880), 5 C. Pltf. then brought an action against deft. to recover damages for breach of the promise to marry her:—Held: assuming the promise to have been made, as pltf. only obtained a divorce by deceiving the Divorce Ct., & as the divorce was necessary for the performance of the promise to marry, the action was founded on deceit & immorality, & it was against public policy to allow it to be maintained.—PREVOST v. WOOD (1905), 21 T. (2) A promise to marry which does not ascertain the time, is a promise to marry in a reasonable time upon request.

(3) On a promise to marry upon request, the request need not be made with a parson.

(4) In an action on a promise to marry upon request a declaration which shows that deft. has married another person who is living need not state a request.

(5) A disability by consanguinity may be given in evidence on the general issue in an action for the breach of a promise of marriage.

The judge left it to the jury, whether they would not presume, from the circumstances, a general promise to marry (which the law would consider as a promise to marry within a reasonable time) & whether the declaration of deft. had any other effect than to render that definite & certain which before was uncertain.—POTTER v. DEBOOS (1815), 1 Stark. 82, N. The jury having found a verdict for pltf. :—Held : (1) pltf. was not entitled to maintain the action ; (2) (SWINFEN EADY & PHILLIMORE, L.JJ.) there was no corroboration of pltf.'s evidence as required by Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869 (c. 68), s. 2 ; (3) (PHILLIMORE & PICKFORD, L.JJ.) assuming that the action would lie to recover special damage, the loss to pltf. by reason of her having given up her business was not special damage flowing from the breach, & was therefore not recoverable.

50. Necessity for.]—By Evidence Further Amendment Act (c. 68), s. 2, it is provided "that no pltf. in any action for breach of promise of marriage shall recover a verdict unless his or her testimony shall be corroborated by some other material evidence in support of such promise." If, therefore, pltf.'s testimony is not corroborated by some other material evidence the case must be withdrawn from the jury. The only evidence in this case rests upon the statement of pltf. herself. There is no other material evidence except that of pltf., & I am bound to withdraw the case from the jury (DARLING, J.).—OWEN v. MOBERLY (1900), 64 J. P. 88.

(2) The jury may take the fact that deft. does not offer himself as a witness to contradict pltf.'s assertion of a promise of marriage made by him as corroboration of such promise under the statute.—WILLCOX v. GOTFREY (1872), 26 L. The sister further stated that, after pltf.'s confinement, she overheard a conversation between pltf. & deft., in the course of which pltf. said to deft., "You always promised to marry me, & you don't keep your word," when deft. said he would give her some money to go away:—Held: this was "material evidence in support of the promise" to satisfy Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869 (c. 68), s. 2.—BESSELA v. STERN (1877), 2 C. Her evidence as to the first occurrence was corroborated by G. & was borne out by deft., & as to the second was substantiated by N. who said that the words used were "Who has a better right to take care of me than my wife." Held: there was sufficient material evidence corroborative of a promise of marriage within 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, s. 2.

Pltf. filed an affidavit in opposition to the application in which she did not deny making the statements, but stated that she had never been married to the man or to any one else:—Held: there ought to be a new trial, but it must be confined to the issue whether pltf. was a married woman at the date of deft.'s promise to marry her.—ROBINSON v. SMITH, [1915] 1 K. SUB-SECT. 3.—BAD CHARACTER OF PLAINTIFF.

71. General rule—Mere accusation & suspicion insufficient—Charges capable of proof.]—In an action against a woman for a breach of promise of marriage, it is a sufficient justification for non-performance, if the person, to whom she has given the promise, turn out upon inquiry to be a man of bad character; but mere accusation & suspicion are not sufficient. The charges, which she makes against him, must, if capable of proof, be substantiated; or they go only to the damages.—BADDELEY v. MORTLOCK (1816), Holt, N. P. 151, N. P.

72. Unchastity—Previous to promise—Necessity for defendant's ignorance.]—(1) In action for breach of promise of marriage, if on the part of deft. it is proved that pltf. is a loose & immodest woman, & that he broke his promise on that account, it goes in bar of the action; but if it also appear that, when he made the promise, he was aware of these circumstances, it is no defence.

(2) In such an action deft. may, in mitigation of damages, go into evidence that his relations disapproved of the match; & if his father is an incompetent witness on account of his having employed the attorney to conduct the defence, a witness will be allowed to prove that he has heard the father express to deft. his dislike to the marriage.—IRVING v. GREENWOOD (1824), 1 C. & P. 350, N. SUB-SECT. 4.—MENTAL OR BODILY INFIRMITY.

81. General rule.]—(1) In an action for breach of promise of marriage deft. alleged in his defence that before the date fixed, for the marriage pltf. had contracted tuberculosis & continued to suffer therefrom, & thus became & still was unfit to marry. Pltf. admitted that on the actual date fixed for the marriage she was so ill, though not from tuberculosis, that she was not then fit to be married:—Held: in these circumstances, the burden was in the first instance on pltf. of showing that she became fit to marry within a reasonable time after date; but, on her giving primâ facie evidence of her having so become fit, the burden passed to the deft. of proving the allegation in his defence.

(2) To an action for breach of promise of marriage it is no defence that deft. honestly & on reasonable grounds believed pltf. to be unfit for marriage on the date fixed for the marriage or within a reasonable time thereafter, if she was not in fact so unfit.

(3) Semble: mental or physical infirmity of pltf. supervening or becoming known to deft. after the date of the promise may in certain cases afford a defence to an action for breach of promise of marriage.—JEFFERSON v. PASKELL, [1916] 1 K. 82. Bodily infirmity—Arising after promise made —Of either party.]—(1) A general promise to marry is a promise to marry on request, & therefore evidence of a promise to marry after a future uncertain event will not support a declaration stating a general promise.

83. —— —— Of defendant — Unfitness for married state.]—Declaration for breach of promise to marry within a reasonable time, averring that a reasonable time had elapsed, & that deft. refused to marry pltf. Plea, that after the promise & before breach deft. was & still is afflicted with a dangerous disease, by reason whereof deft. became, & was, & thenceforth hitherto has been, & still is capable of marriage, without danger to his life, & therefore unfit for the married state whereof pltf. had notice before action. The jury found the plea proved, except the notice:—Held: a party cannot set up as an excuse for the breach of a promise to marry that the performance of the conjugal duties would be dangerous to his life, & the plea disclosed no good defence to pltf.'s claim for damages.—HALL v. WRIGHT (1859), E. i. Admissibility of evidence — To rebut charge.]—Deft. attempted by his cross-examination to show pltf.'s unchastity before her acquaintance with him:—Held: this gave pltf. the right to repel the imputation involved in such cross-examination, not only by her own evidence, but also to vindicate her character by other testimony.—BURKE v. SCRIBNER (1876), 3 Pug. 652.—CAN.

87. Release in consideration of money payment.]—A promise by deft. to pay £1,000 in consideration of her discharging him from his promise to marry her is good.—BAKER v. SMITH (1651), Sty. 295, 303; 82 E. R. 722.

88. Necessity for proposition to exonerate—Acceded to by defendant.]—To a declaration in assumpsit for the breach of a promise to marry in a reasonable time, alleging mutual promises, deft. pleaded, that after the making of the promise in the declaration mentioned, & before any breach thereof by deft., pltf. wholly absolved, exonerated, & discharged deft. from his promise & the performance of the same:—Held: a good plea in point of form, but if issue were taken upon it, deft. would not be able to succeed, unless he proved a proposition to exonerate on the part of pltf., acceded to by himself, which, in effect, would be a rescinding of the contract previously made.—KING v. GILLETT (1840), 7 M. & W. 55; 10 L. 89. Conduct implying exoneration.]—In an action for breach of promise of marriage, it was proved that deft., having written a letter to pltf. desiring to terminate the engagement, called at her father's house, & a conversation took place respecting the return of letters. Deft. returned pltf.'s letters; pltf. said:—"No, I can't give up your letters; it would be like giving you up altogether." Pltf. left her home & went to reside with an aunt for a long period, & no correspondence took place between the parties for a period of two years:—Held: this was evidence from which the jury might infer that pltf. had exonerated deft. from his promise before any breach.—DAVIS v. BOMFORD (1860), 6 H. & N. 245; 30 L. J. Ex. 139; 3 L. T. 279; 158 E. R. 101.

90. Mere submission to defendant's wishes insufficient.]—To an action for breach of promise of marriage deft. pleaded that before any breach of the promise "by either party, it was agreed by & between pltf. & deft. that pltf. & deft. should be & they then were absolved & discharged" from the contract. A letter from deft. was put in at the trial, the material passage of which was as follows:—"It will be better to part now than to endeavour to keep up the appearance of confidence for a time, only to end in disappointment, & to have to part at last perhaps in anger. I tell you candidly & plainly that I cannot perform the part which would be expected of me, for by so doing I must neglect other duties, upon which my very subsistence depends. & that being the case, what good can be done by protracting the evil day?" A letter from pltf. in reply was next read; it contained the following sentence, which was relied upon by deft. as his discharge:—"Since it is your wish, we will part":—Held: this did not absolve & discharge deft. from his promise, as it amounted to no more than a mere submission by pltf. to deft.'s act.—LAYCOCK v. PICKSLAY (1850), 15 L. T. O. S. 279.

91. Effect of new agreement to marry.]—In an action for breach of promise of marriage deft. proposed to plead with six other pleas a plea of accord & satisfaction by a new agreement to marry. This plea was disallowed at chambers as being vexatious. Upon appeal, however, to the ct., it was allowed, upon deft. or her attorney filing an affidavit that there was reasonable & probable cause for pleading it.—SMITH v. JENKINS (1873), 28 L. T. 562.

SUB-SECT. 7.—OFFER OF PERFORMANCE.

92. Necessity for plaintiff's refusal before date of writ—Communication of offer to plaintiff's attorney.]—Upon an action for breach of promise of marriage, deft. pleaded that he was ready & willing to marry pltf., but she had refused. To support this plea deft. relied upon a letter he had sent to pltf.'s attorney before action brought offering marriage. The contents of the letter were not communicated to pltf. until after the action was commenced, when she refused to marry deft.:—Held: the plea was not proved from his promise.—BELLAMY v. ROBERTSON (1915), 30 W. Ten days later he entered an asylum as a voluntary patient, & was shortly afterwards certified & detained as a lunatic. He never recovered & died in the asylum two years afterwards. After his death the lady raised an action of damages against his testamentary trustees.—Held: as the man had done nothing except postpone the marriage, & had never been able subsequently to fulfil his engagement, pursuer was not entitled to damages.—LIDDELL v. EASTON'S TRUSTEES, [1907] S. f. What amounts to release.]—A letter by the woman offering to return "any or all of your gifts as you wish" & requesting the man as a personal favour not to return her the gifts "I have given you from time to time although I know this is perhaps the usual thing to do," & concluding with "for as you say there is no reason why we should not remain friends," is not in itself conclusive evidence of the woman's intention to absolve the man

PART I. SECT. 7, SUB-SECT. 7.

h. Sufficiency of offer.]—A marriage was fixed to take place on the morning of June 25. Defender was up all the night of June 23. Early on June 24 he called at pursuer's house & used some angry words, among others: "You will never go a married wife to Letham for me." All parties seem to have regarded this as a hasty expression, not intended to break off the marriage; & he was expected to call during the day & make the final arrangements. He went to bed, a little the worse for liquor, at mid-day,

Part II.—Marriage.

SECT. 1.—NATURE OF.

123. Voluntary union of one man & one woman—For lasting cohabitation—Procreation of children.]—A marriage is not every casual commerce; nor would it be so in the law of nature. A mere casual commerce, without the intention of cohabitation, & bringing up of children, would not constitute marriage under any supposition. But when two persons agree to have that commerce for the procreation & bringing up of children, & for such lasting cohabitation, that, in a state of nature, would be a marriage, & in the absence of all civil & religious institutes, might safely be presumed to be, as it is popularly called, a marriage in the sight of God (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

Scottish marriages have been mentioned. The rule prevailed in all times, as the rule of the canon law, which existed in this country & in Scotland, till other civil regulations interfered in this country; & it is the rule which prevails in many countries of the world, at this day, that a mutual engagement, or betrothment, is a good marriage, without consummation, according to the law of nature, & binds the parties accordingly, as the terms of other contracts would do, respecting the engagements which they purport to describe. If they agree, & pledge their troth to resign to each other the use of their persons, for the purpose of raising a common offspring, by the law of nature that is complete. It is not necessary that actual use & possession should have intervened to complete the vinculum fidei (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

A marriage purporting to be according to the usages of the Jews is void unless the Jewish law is complied with. The validity of such marriage is determined by the evidence of an expert in the Jewish law, as in the case of foreign marriages.—LINDO v. BELISARIO (1795), 1 Hag. Con. 216; 161 E. R. 531; on appeal (1796), 1 Hag. Con. App. 7.

125. Civil contract & religious vow.]—(1) In more modern times, it [the contract of marriage] has been considered in its proper light, as a civil contract, as well as a religious vow, & like all civil contracts will be invalidated by want of consent of capable persons (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) It is, I conceive, perfectly clear in law that a party may come forward to maintain his own past incapacity, & also that a defect of incapacity invalidates the contract of marriage as well as any other contract (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—TURNER v. MEYERS (1808), 1 Hag. Con. 414; 161 E. R. 600.

126. Contract altering relation of parties to public.]—Marriage is a contract by which the relation of parties to the public is materially altered; it is a contract which is to be entered into by the parties with all public notoriety, & which is to be performed in a public place. The high importance of this contract has required by the known law of the country, & every Christian country, that there shall be a publication of banns, to give validity to a contract sui generis. The word "banns," in the old German language, signified a publication, meaning that there should be a previous notification generally to the world, that all persons may have notice that such & such persons are going to be married. This condition is never relaxed but by dispensation in the way of licence. If this be so, what is the publication the law requires? I think nothing can be more clear than that the publication should notify, what it is fit the world, for public purposes, should know, that such persons are going to enter into that state & condition of life. A publication that A. & B. were going to be married, when in fact it was C. & D., would be a nullity in itself, & consequently a marriage grafted upon it must be a nullity likewise; & though later times have introduced a very relaxed practice, yet by the known law of the country it requires a publication by banns, at least where not dispensed with by the Ordinary, which the statute law reaffirms & strengthens. Now it has been argued that the true & proper Christian & surname of the party cannot be altered but by proper authority, by the King's licence, or an Act of the Legislature: yet there may be cases, where names acquired by general use & habit may be taken by repute as the true Christian & surname of the parties. If a person has acquired a name by repute, in fact the use of the true name in the banns would be an act of concealment, that would not satisfy the public purposes of the statute; therefore I do say that names so acquired by use & habit might supersede the use of the true name (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—FRANKLAND v. NICHOLSON (1805), 3 M. & S. 259, n.; 105 E. 127. Status arising out of contract.]—(1) Marriage is based upon the contract of the parties, but is a status arising out of the contract to which each country is entitled to attach its own conditions, both as to the creation & duration.

(2) B., a Portuguese, but domiciled in England, married in England S., a Portuguese lady, domiciled in Portugal. They were first cousins, & by the law of Portugal, were, except by dispensation from the Pope, incapable of contracting marriage:—Held: the ignorance of the parties, as to the effect of Portuguese law upon the validity of the ceremony, could not affect the validity of the marriage.—SOTTOMAYER v. DE BARROS (1879), 5 P. SECT. 2.—REQUISITES OF A VALID MARRIAGE.

128. Essentials to validity.]—(1) Concealment by a woman from her husband at the time of her marriage of the fact that she is then pregnant by another man does not render the marriage null & void.

(2) The English law of the validity of marriage is clearly defined. There must be the voluntary consent of both parties. There must be compliance with the legal requirements of publication & solemnisation, so far as the law deems it essential. There must not be incapacity in the parties to marry either as respects age or physical capability or as respects relationship by blood or marriage. Failure in these respects, but I believe in no others (I omit reference to the peculiar statutory position of the descendants of George II.) renders the marriage void or voidable. It has been repeatedly stated that a marriage may be declared null on the ground of fraud or duress. But, on examination, it will be found that this is only a way of amplifying the proposition long ago laid down, that the voluntary consent of the parties is required. In the case of duress with regard to the marriage contract, as with regard to any other, it is obvious that there is an absence of a consenting will. But when in English law fraud is spoken of as a ground for avoiding a marriage, this does not include such fraud as induces a consent but is limited to such fraud as procures the appearance without the reality of consent (SIR FRANCIS JEUNE, P.).—MOSS v. MOSS, [1897] P. 263; 66 L. 134. Presumption of—Only rebutted by clear & cogent evidence.]—When a person of full age & of sound mind has gone through the ceremony of marriage publicly in the presence of witnesses, who discovered nothing in her demeanour to suggest constraint, & has herself complied with the formality of signing her name & answering questions without apparent difficulty or confusion, very clear & cogent evidence must be given before the presumption of consent can be rebutted & the marriage annulled.

Resp. believed that petitioner, who was his cousin, was possessed of considerable wealth, &, having obtained a licence for his marriage with her at St. Bride's Church, in Fleet St., London, drove her from Notting Hill, where she was staying with friends, to the door of the church under pretence of taking her to attend service at St. Paul's Cathedral. He then threatened that, unless she married him, he would shoot himself; & they thereupon entered the church, & the ceremony of marriage between them was gone through, petitioner saying she was dazed; but nothing occurred to attract the notice of the minister who performed the ceremony. After the ceremony resp. drove petitioner back to her friends, left her there, & never saw her again. The marriage was never consummated, & petitioner never mentioned any of the circumstances to any one until more than two years after, when resp.'s father sent the marriage certificate over to her mother. There was some evidence that petitioner was impressionable. The petitioner prayed for a declaration of nullity of the marriage:—Held: the evidence was not sufficient to rebut the presumption of consent arising from going through the ceremony without complaint or apparent reluctance; & the ct. ordered the petition to be dismissed.—COOPER v. CRANE, [1891] P. 369; 61 L. J. P. 35; sub nom. CRANE (OTHERWISE COOPER) v. CRANE, 40 W. R.

SUB-SECT. 2.—MISTAKE.

135. As to character & position.]—(1) Error about the family or fortune of the individual, though produced by disingenuous representations, does not at all affect the validity of the marriage. A man who means to act upon such representations should verify them by his own inquiries; the law presumes that he uses due caution in a manner in which his happiness for life is so materially involved, & it makes no provision for the relief of a blind credulity, however, it may have been produced (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) The marriage, except in case of a licence, is to be performed by proclamation of banns, which is to designate the individual, in order to awaken the vigilance of parents & guardians, & to give them an opportunity of protecting their rights. It therefore requires that the true name should be given to them, evidently considering that a name assumed for the occasion is a name that will not answer the purposes of the provisions. Accordingly, this ct. has conceived itself to be carrying the intention of the law into effect, when it has annulled marriages where a false name has been inserted in the banns, though no fraud were intended; upon the ground that such proclamation was no proclamation referring to that marriage, but to another transaction; the marriage therefore was without proclamation of banns, & consequently illegal (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—WAKEFIELD v. MACKAY (1807), 1 Hag. 140. ——.]—An Italian went through a ceremony of marriage with an English girl in England under the belief that the ceremony was one of betrothal only, & did not constitute a marriage. There was no subsequent cohabitation or consummation:—Held: there had been no valid marriage, as the husband did not know that he was going to be married, & did not know until later in the day the effect of what had been done, & there was nothing in his subsequent conduct which amounted to a ratification.—VALIER v. VALIER (OTHERWISE DAVIS), VALIER v. VALIER, VALIER INTERVENING (1925), 133 L. 141. —— Mistake induced by duress of petitioner's mother—Acting in concert with respondent.]—Petitioner was induced by her own mother, acting in concert with resp. to go through the ceremony of marriage with resp. At the time of the marriage the mother, who was shown to have exercised an abnormal amount of control over her daughter, persuaded her that the ceremony she had gone through was merely a ceremony of betrothal:—Held: petitioner acted under the duress of her mother, & was not a consenting party of the marriage, & was therefore entitled to a decree of nullity.—FORD v. STIER, [1896] P. 1; sub nom. CLARKE v. CLARKE, 65 L. 143. ——.]—Although public policy requires that a marriage should not be lightly set aside, the validity of a contract of marriage must be tested in the same manner as that of an ordinary contract, & therefore a marriage will be annulled if the consent of either party thereto was obtained by means of fraud or duress.

Petitioner, a young woman of twenty-two years of age, entitled to a sum of £26,000 in actual possession & a considerable sum in reversion, had become engaged to resp. & shortly after coming of age was induced by him to accept bills to the amount of £3,325. The persons who had discounted these bills subsequently issued writs against her, & threatened to make her a bkpt. The distress caused by these threats seriously affected her health, & reduced her to a state of bodily & mental prostration, in which she was incapable of resisting coercion & threats, & being assured by resp. that the only method of evading bkpcy. proceedings & exposure was to marry him, she reluctantly went through a ceremony of marriage with him at a registrar's office. In addition to other threats of ruining her, resp. immediately before the ceremony threatened to shoot her, if she showed that she was not acting of her free will. The marriage was never consummated, & petitioner & resp. separated immediately after the ceremony:—Held: there was not such a consent on the part of petitioner as the law requires for the making of a contract of marriage, & that the ceremony before the registrar must be declared null & void.—SCOTT v. SEBRIGHT (1886), 12 P. 148. ——.]—A man, after paying to a girl of sixteen attentions which she rejected, threatened to blow her brains out if she would not consent to marry him, & produced from his pocket a pistol, which he held at her head. She then promised to marry him on condition that he put away the pistol, which he did. A few days later she went home, & shortly afterwards he intercepted her while on a railway journey, & took her to the office of a registrar of marriages, stating that they were going to see his mother. During the marriage ceremony she fainted, &, as soon as it was over, she got right away. The marriage was never consummated, & the man never insisted upon his marital rights. The ct. pronounced the marriage to be null & void.—BARTLETT (FALSELY CALLED RICE) v. RICE (1894), 72 L. T. 122.

PART II. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 2.

138 ii. ——.]—Pltf. & deft., who were foreign Jews unacquainted with English, went through the prescribed form of marriage before a magistrate. They did not cohabit, & prior to the date fixed for the religious ceremony in the synagogue pltf. discovered that deft. was an apostate:—Held: as pltf. was unaware that she was being married & believed that the ceremony before the magistrate was merely a registration of her engagement, the marriage must be declared null & void.—RUBENS v. RUBENS (1909), 26 S. 149. Evidence insufficient to rebut presumption of consent.]—A young lady, eighteen years of age, entitled to considerable property, her parents being dead, having been passing her vacation at the house of one of the exors. named in her father's will, whom she considered as her guardian, was induced by his brother, who was residing in the same house, & was fifty-two years of age, to promise to marry him; she withdrew that promise a few days afterwards but was importuned again & prevailed upon to renew it, & the marriage was celebrated without the knowledge of any of her friends, upon a false statement made by him of her age & residence in the publication of the banns & in the register of the marriage. There was no cohabitation, nor consummation of the marriage, as she alleged. She, after a few days, went to a friend's house, & by his advice applied for an Act to annul the marriage, the same being considered valid in law:—Held: it did not appear by the evidence that the marriage was not solemnised with the free consent of the lady, & the case made was not such as to justify legislative interference.—FIELD'S MARRIAGE ANNULLING BILL (1848), 2 H. B. Marriage with Deceased Wife's Sister.

See Deceased Wife's Sister's Marriage Act, 1907 (c. 47).

202. Deceased Wife's Sister's Marriage Act, 1907 (c. 47)—Effect of—Law altered in civil sense only.]—The [above Act] seems to recognise a distinction between the civil & ecclesiastical aspects of marriage, & to alter the law as to the one without purporting to affect the law as to the other. If the Act had merely repealed the statutory prohibition of marriage with a deceased wife's sister, 32 Hen. 8, c. 38, the result as far as ecclesiastical law is concerned, would have been clear. Canon 99, already abrogated by Marriage Act, 1835 (c. 54), with regard to legal proceedings to annul marriages within the prohibited degrees, would, so far as marriages with a deceased wife's sister are concerned, have become repugnant to statute & therefore altogether inoperative: 25 Hen. 8, c. 19, s. 3. But the apparent intention of the recent Act is to alter the law in a civil sense only, so that it cannot be said to have necessarily affected the canon (DEAN OF ARCHES).—BANISTER & WIFE v. THOMPSON, [1908] P. 362; 24 T. C. 533; 81 L. J. K. B. 918; 107 L. T. 66; 28 T. L. R. 490; 56 Sol. Jo. 647, H. L.; affg. S. C. sub nom. R. v. DIBDIN, [1910] P. 57, C. A.

207. —— —— Existing interests not affected.]—(1) A man died in 1902 having by his will given his property upon trust to pay his wife the income thereof while she remained his widow, with a gift over on her death or second marriage. In 1904 she went through the ceremony of marriage with her deceased sister's husband, but this marriage was validated by sect. 1 of above Act, which was passed & came into operation on Aug. 28, 1907:—Held: the effect of sect. 2 of the Act was that pltf. was still entitled to receive the income of testator's property.

(2) Semble: although the Act renders valid as civil contracts previous marriages with deceased wives' sisters, it does not alter or interfere with any rights of property depending on the previous marriages not being valid.—Re WHITFIELD, HILL v. MATHIE, [1911] 1 Ch. 310; 80 L. The first wife died in 1874, & in 1884 the husband married his deceased wife's sister. Such a marriage was at that time invalid. There were three children of each marriage, & the three children of the second marriage were born before the passing of above Act:—Held: as the three children of the first marriage had, at the passing of the Act, a vested interest in remainder, the case fell within sect. 2 of above Act & the children of the second marriage were not entitled to any share in the settled fund.—Re SPRINGFIELD, DAVIES v. SPRINGFIELD (1922), 38 T. This marriage, which was contracted prior to 1907, was with the husband of her deceased sister:—Held: the children of the second marriage were entitled to share in the undisposed of personal estate of testatrix equally with her grandson by her first marriage, just as if the second marriage had always been legal. SUB-SECT. 2.—CONTRACTS PER VERBA DE PRÆSENTI.

222. Nature & effect of—Former law.]—The first & material point for consideration in this case is, as to the effect, by the law of England, previous to the Marriage Act, of a contract or engagement of matrimony per verba de præsenti; by which I understand a contract of present marriage; for that is the sense in which these words are used in all the text-writers & reports of decisions upon the subject. "Spousals de præsenti," Swinburne says, "are a mutual contract or promise of present matrimony; as when the man doth say to the woman, 'I do take thee to my wife; & she then answereth, 'I do take thee to my husband.'" Such a contract entered into between a man & a woman was indissoluble; the parties could not, by mutual consent, release each other from the obligation. Either party might, by a suit in the spiritual ct., compel the other to solemnise in facie ecclesiæ. It was so much a marriage, that, if they cohabited together before solemnisation, they could not be proceeded against for fornication, but merely for a contempt. If either of them cohabited with another person, the parties might be proceeded against for adultery. The contract was considered to be of the essence of matrimony, & was, therefore, & by reason of its indissoluble nature, styled in the ecclesiastical law "verum matrimonium," & sometimes "ipsum matrimonium." Another & most important effect of such a contract was, that, if either of the parties afterwards married with another person, solemnising the same in facie ecclesiæ, such marriage might be set aside even after cohabitation & the birth of children, & the parties compelled to solemnise the first marriage in facie ecclesiæ. Such were the effects of a contract of marriage per verba de præsenti (LORD LYNDHURST, C.).

229. ——.]—Parties, concerned in the marriage of a male infant ward of the ct., attending by order, the clergyman, appearing exculpated, was discharged, with costs out of pocket from the infant's estate. The others ordered to attend the master on an inquiry, whether the marriage, by false names, was valid; & upon the report a suit for nullity of marriage at the expense of the infant's estate was ordered; & all the parties were restrained by injunction from all intercourse, personal, by correspondence, or otherwise, with the infant.

If the parties have been married by false names, that affects the validity of the marriage; & how is that to be discovered, unless those inquiries are made, which the Act of Parliament [26 Geo. 2, c. 23] directs; declaring, that no minister shall forthwith "bedded," according to an obsolete Scotch fashion:—Held: no marriage was contracted.—STEUART v. ROBERTSON (1875), L. R. 2 Sc. & Div. 494.—SCOT.

t. ——.]—The parties, who had long been on terms of sexual intimacy, went through a ceremony of marriage per verba de præsenti. After the ceremony the parties did not take up house together, & the woman continued to use her maiden name to which she had reverted after the divorce, but the man frequently visited her & stayed in her house, as he had done before, & from time to time gave her money. He never told his relatives that he was married, nor did he introduce the woman to any of his friends as his wife. During his last illness he did not send for her, & he stated on his deathbed that she had no claim upon him. He made no provision for her in his will, & the only letter written to him by her which was produced was inconsistent in the mode of address & the style of signature with the status of a wife:—Held: the evidence of the circumstances surrounding the ceremony was not so satisfactory & complete as to overcome the conclusion to be drawn from the subsequent conduct of the parties that a genuine marriage had not taken place.—DAVIDSON v. DAVIDSON, [1921] S. 230. —— Power of clergyman to dispense with —On own responsibility—Liability to Ecclesiastical courts for neglect.]—Articles, against a clergyman, for publishing banns of marriage between persons not parishioners of, nor resident in, his parish; & for marrying such persons, admitted.

These Acts of Parliament [26 Geo. 2, c. 33, & 4 Geo. 4, c. 76] do not, & were not meant to, repeal the authority of the Ecclesiastical Cts. in cases of this description, but one & the other may be put in execution; & this, even in cases where the conduct of the minister may have been such as to render him liable to an indictment & conviction of felony (SIR HERBERT JENNER).

The law is not imperative upon [the clergyman] to require seven days' notice before he publishes the banns, nor would he be punishable for publishing the banns without that particular notice, or the expiration of the seven days; but if he chooses to dispense with the notice which he is entitled to require, & if it should turn out that the parties are not entitled to have the banns published in his parish, he must take upon himself the consequence of his own neglect to do that which the law has provided for his security; he cannot be allowed to shelter himself under the excuse that he was ignorant of the fact of their non-residence in the parish, when he might, & ought to have inquired into the facts (SIR HERBERT JENNER).

The original jurisdiction which the Ecclesiastical Cts. possessed & exercised in cases of this description is not taken away by any of the statutes; the ordinary is still entitled to proceed to the correction of any of his clergy who may offend against the order of the church, in publishing banns & solemnising matrimony in any other manner than that prescribed by the law (SIR HERBERT JENNER). —WYNN v. DAVIES & WEEVER (1835), 1 Curt. 69; 163 E. 234. District chapelry—Effect of formation of Peel parish—Necessity for sanction of marriages in the chapel.]—(1) Where a district chapelry had been carved out of an ancient parochial chapelry, & part of such district chapelry had been formed into a Peel parish, & the incumbent of the ancient parochial chapelry claimed to be entitled to publish banns, & celebrate marriages between persons resident in such district chapelry & Peel parish, & to receive the fees for such offices:—Held: when marriages were sanctioned in the chapel attached to the district chapelry, the incumbent of the district chapelry had an exclusive right to publish banns, & celebrate marriages between persons residing in the district chapelry, & to receive the fees for so doing; & the creation of the Peel parish out of the district chapelry did not restore the rights of the incumbent of the ancient parochial chapelry; & therefore, whatever might be the rights as between the incumbents of the district chapelry & Peel parish, the incumbent of the ancient parochial chapelry had no right to perform such offices, or receive the fees in the Peel parish.

(2) Where a licence to marry at a particular church is in proper form, the incumbent of such church is not only entitled, but compellable to perform the ceremony; & the responsibility of ascertaining that one of the persons to be married has dwelt for fifteen days in the district for which the licence has been granted rests on the ordinary granting it, & not on the officiating minister.—TUCKNESS v. ALEXANDER (1863), 2 Drew. & Sm. 614; 2 New Rep. 480; 32 L. i. In General.

See Marriage Act, 1823 (c. 76), s. 22.

248. General rule.]—Suit of nullity of marriage under Marriage Act, 1823 (c. 76), by reason of undue publication of banns sustained; both parties having "knowingly & wilfully intermarried after such undue publication."

In all cases of this kind, three questions necessarily arise: whether a marriage has been had between the parties to the suit; whether there has been an undue publication of banns; whether both parties were cognisant of the undue publication before the marriage was celebrated (SIR HERBERT JENNER).—TONGUE v. ALLEN (1835), 1 Curt. 38; 163 E. 249. Principles on which court will act.]—(1) Marriage without due publication of banns not void under Marriage Act, 1823 (c. 76), unless both parties cognisant of the undue publication.

(2) Semble: a marriage without any publication of banns, would be held to be without due publication of banns under Marriage Act, 1823 (c. 76), s. 22.

(3) In all cases of this description it is the duty of the ct. to be extremely cautious in pronouncing a marriage, solemnised between two parties, null & void, & to examine the whole of the evidence produced in proof of the nullity with great vigilance & jealousy; because, in these cases, opportunities are offered to parties to practise fraud & collusion; & this is the more necessary, where the party, whose interests are apparently affected, & whose object it is to uphold the marriage endeavoured to be set aside, seems to have afforded every facility to the other party. Where the party before the ct., whose interests are affected abandons his cause, the ct. would be inclined to withhold its interposition for the protection of such a party; but where the interests of third parties & of the public are concerned, it is a duty incumbent on the ct. to be upon its guard against surprise (SIR HERBERT JENNER).—WRIGHT v. ELWOOD (1837), 1 Curt. 662; 163 E. 254. Knowledge of both parties essential.]—To render a marriage invalid within Marriage Act, 1823 (c. 76), s. 22, it must be contracted by both parties with a knowledge that no due publication has taken place. Therefore, where the intended husband procured the banns to be published in a Christian & surname which the woman had never borne, but she did not know that fact until after the solemnisation of the marriage:—Held: the marriage was valid.—R. v. WROXTON (INHABITANTS) (1833), 4 B. & Ad. 640; 1 Nev. & M. 255. -.]- WRIGHT v. ELWOOD, No. 249, ante.

256. -.]- -TEMPLETON v. TYREE, No. 160, ante.

257. -.]—(1) A marriage solemnised after an undue publication of banns will not be held null & void under the provisions of Marriage Act, 1823 (c. 76), unless it be shown that both parties "knowingly & wilfully" concurred in such undue publication. Where an intending husband, then a minor, & desiring to have a secret marriage, gave instructions for the publications of banns, & in such instructions omitted two of his own Christian names & one of the Christian names of his intended wife, also a minor, & the names were entered with such omissions in the register of banns, there being no evidence of how the banns were actually published, & the names were, after the ceremony, signed by the respective parties, with the same omissions, in the register, there being no further evidence besides that of the husband, who deposed that he omitted the names, not thinking or believing he was acting contrary to law, & for brevity's sake only, & the marriage having been reputed good for more than thirty years:—Held: the husband was not proved to have committed any offence against the statute.

(2) The husband deposed that prior to the marriage the intended wife neither directly nor indirectly took any step towards the publication of the banns, but left the matter entirely to him. There was no evidence of knowledge on her part beyond her signature of the marriage register with the omission above mentioned, that not being her usual form of signature. She being dead, & the marriage having been reputed good throughout her life, that is to say, for upwards of twenty-four years:—Held: the ct. could not impute to the wife knowledge of the omission of the name in the instructions for publication of banns.—GOMPERTZ v. KENSIT (1872), L. R. 13 Eq. 369; 41 L. J. Ch. 382; 26 L. T. 95; 36 J. P. 548; 20 W. R. 313.

258. ——.]—In charges of bigamy it is incumbent upon the prosecution to prove the validity of the first marriage. Where, therefore, the first marriage has been contracted without the due publication of banns required by Marriage Act, 1823 (c. 76), the prosecution, in order to show that the case is not within the statute, must prove that the want of due publication was unknown to one of the parties previously to the marriage.

The prisoner went through the form of marriage with a woman whose surname was Abel. In order to conceal the fact, he published her banns in the surname of Anderson, but, except that she signed the register in the name of Anderson, there was no evidence to show that she knew of the misdescription until after the solemnisation of the marriage. Subsequently, & during her lifetime, the prisoner went through the ceremony of marriage with another woman:—Held: as in order to render a marriage invalid within Marriage Act, 1823 (c. 76), s. 22, it must be contracted by both parties with a knowledge that no due publication of banns had taken place, it was incumbent on the prosecution to show that one of the parties was unaware of the misdescription, & there was no evidence of such want of knowledge.—R. v. KAY (1887), 16 Cox, C. C. 292.

259. —— Positive & direct proof of fraud not necessary.]—Nullity of marriage by reason of undue publication of banns pronounced for, on evidence that both parties were cognisant of the fraud. It is not necessary that there should be positive & direct proof that the false publication was with a view to fraud; but there must be evidence of concert between the parties.—ORME v. HOLLOWAY (FALSELY CALLING HERSELF ORME) (1847), 5 Notes of Cases, 267.

The false name was given to the officiating clergyman without any intention to mislead, nor did any individual having an interest in the marriage appear to have been deceived:—Held: the marriage was void. It might have been otherwise if, without any fraudulent intent, there

309. ——.]—An application was made to me by Mr. B., who had been resp. in a divorce suit, to order a licence to issue for the celebration of his marriage. Upon his producing a certified copy of the decree dissolving his previous marriage, & upon his satisfying me upon oath that there was no legal impediment to the marriage, I ordered the licence to issue for its celebration by him in the church named, being of opinion that by law I was bound to grant the licence. The late Bishop of London lodged in the registry "an order directing that in future no licence for the marriage of divorced persons should issue." I was informed of this by the proctor who applied for the licence, & who intimated to me that he should contend that the order was ultra vires, & that if I held that it was binding on me, as Chancellor, he should contest its validity by mandamus. I came to the c. Ground for refusing — Prohibition of remarriage—During period fixed by divorce decree.]—A decree of divorce obtained in the state of Washington prohibited the marriage of either party for six months from the entry of the decree, that being the time limited for appealing from the decree:—Held: the prohibition was not in the nature of a penalty but an integral part of the decree & therefore good ground for refusing a licence to either party to marry in British Columbia before the end of said six months, although such party had become domiciled therein.—Re MARRIAGE ACT, Re EATON, [1922] 1 W. W. R. 236; 30 B. C. R. 243.—CAN.

conclusion that the order was ultra vires, & that I was bound by law to grant the licence. The English Church Union by their proctor entered a caveat against its being granted. I ordered the application to be made in ct. & directed notice of the holding of the ct. to be given to the opposing proctor. On the case coming on I was informed that the opposition to it had been abandoned, & I granted the licence, stating shortly the grounds on which I held that it ought to issue. . . . In my judgment any British subject who has resided for 15 days in the Diocese of London, upon satisfying me upon oath that there is no impediment recognised by the Law of England to his marrying the other party, also being a British subject, is entitled as of right to a licence for the celebration of such marriage. I am directed by my letters patent to grant marriage licences which "have been used & accustomed to be done by the laws, customs, canons & statutes of the Kingdom of Great Britain." There is no power conferred on me by my letters patent in granting or refusing a marriage licence, to exercise an arbitrary or even judicial discretion in the matter. There is no such power vested in me by statute or by custom. . . . In what mode is a person entitled by law to object to the celebration of a marriage by licence? His proper course is to enter a caveat in the Diocesan Registry against such licence issuing, which affords him an opportunity of bringing forward his objections before the Chancellor. If he is prevented from doing so, & the licence issues, he should communicate to the registry his objection. The matter will be inquired into, & if it is a valid one, the licence will be revoked. The next question is whether there is any authority for an appeal from a refusal to grant a licence to the Provincial Ct., & from thence to the Judicial Committee. It is a well-established rule of Ecclesiastical law that there is an appeal from every gravamen alleged to have committed by an Ecclesiastical Judge, except on the question of costs. No citation can issue from the Registry without the fiat of the Chancellor. If the Chancellor refuses his fiat, there is an appeal from his refusal. . . . In the case of Mr. B. I declined to go into particulars, on the ground that it was not discretionary with me to grant or refuse a licence, & that as he was entitled to marry, & there was no legal impediment to it, I was bound to grant the licence (DR. TRISTRAM).—Ex p. BRINCKMAN (1895), 11 T. L. R. 387.

310. ——.]—There is an appeal from the refusal of a licence in an uncontested as well as in a contested case. The practice of this ct. is, when the Chancellor entertains any doubt as to the granting, to require the licence to be moved for in camera, when he takes evidence on oath to enable him to determine the matter, & if he is satisfied with it he decrees the licence to issue as Vicar-General of the Bishop & Official Principal. If he refuses it, he gives appct., if he desires it, leave to file his petition with a view to an appeal. Cases of this description are brought before me from time to time on which it would be unjust to refuse an appeal. . . . The only remedy the parties have against the objector to a marriage by banns is by an action on the case for damages, & it is for this reason that he is required to give a bond & sureties to meet damages or costs. They have no remedy against him in the Ecclesiastical Ct. But, if he objects to a marriage by licence, the objection should be referred back to the Chancellor & determined summarily by him. I have only to add that, as the Bishop of London considered it objectionable that licences for the marriage of a guilty party should issue in his name & not in mine as Vicar-General & Official Principal, I made an order of ct., under 10 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 9, that they should issue under my name, & on any guilty party applying for a licence, I inform him that the Bishop of London & many of the Bishops & clergy object to the guilty party being married in a church, & that they may be legally married at the registry, but that if they require it I am bound to grant one to them (DR. TRISTRAM).—DIVORCE MARRIAGE LICENCES (1895), 11 T. L. R. 496.

(2) In the publication of banns . . . both parties must be cognisant of the fraud. . . . There is a distinction between banns & licences. The publication of banns is a notice to all the world of an intention of the parties to contract a marriage with each other, & the Act directs that the true Christian & surname must be used, & where a different name is used, it is equivalent to a marriage had without publication of banns, &, under the old Act, the marriage was null & void (SIR H. A marriage was solemnised by virtue of a licence, in which the name of the woman was stated to be "Margaret Bevan," her baptismal name, & that by which she was commonly called, being "Margaret Lea Bevan." The licence was obtained in the altered name by the man, who, knowingly, & by the direction of the woman, suppressed the name "Lea," in order that the surrogate might not know who the woman was, & that the intended marriage might be kept secret from her friends:—Held: in a suit of nullity of marriage instituted by the woman on the ground of misnomer in the licence, as the name "Margaret Bevan" might represent her, & the licence was obtained for her, & by her direction, the marriage was not void as having been solemnised without licence.—BEVAN (FALSELY CALLED M'MAHON) v. M'MAHON (1861), 2 Sw. & Tr. 230; 30 L. 321. —— —— Both parties of age.]—Suit of nullity of marriage, by licence, by reason of the false description of names, not sustained.

If there is no deception as to the identity, it may be asked, what is the fraud that is imputed in this case? There was no imposition on the ordinary, or on the minister, or on either of the parties, as the name had actually been used for a considerable time. There is no averment that a licence, obtained in one name, was transferred to another person. If that case should occur, & it should appear that a licence, procured for one person, was transferred to another it might be a fraud which the ct. would be bound to notice. But there is no such ingredient here. I am of opinion that this case is governed by that which has been referred to, & that I am bound to hold that the mere circumstance, that the licence has been obtained in the name of the person, which she has actually borne, though not the true name, will not authorise the ecclesiastical ct. to pronounce such marriage null & void (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—COPE v. BURT (FALSELY CALLING HERSELF COPE) (1809), 1 Hag. If this name had been assumed for the purpose of fraud in order to enable the party to contract marriage, & to conceal himself from the party to whom he was about to be married, that would have been a fraud on the Marriage Act & the rights of marriage, & the ct. would not have given effect to any such corrupt purpose. 326. Whether marriage invalidated by — Insufficient evidence of marriage.]—(1) In nullity, by reason of minority, & want of consent, what consent required. Consent, once given, how to be retracted.

This was a case of nullity of marriage, on the part of the wife, by reason of her minority, & the want of consent of her mother. The suit is brought by Miss H. to annul her own marriage, under the provisions of the Marriage Act, 1753 (c. 33), which is made, I will not say in derogation of the liberty of marriage, but as a restriction upon it. As such, it has always been held right that it should be strictly construed. It is enacted, that the marriage of minors celebrated without the consent of parents or guardians, as specified in the Act, should be invalid (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) The onus probandi lies on the party suing to annul the marriage, who must prove clearly not only the minority, but also the want of the

d. Whether marriage invalidated by — Absence of statutory provision.]—Resp. obtained a licence under which he went through the form of marriage with a girl of fifteen by falsely representing to the registrar that the person he proposed to marry was of the age of nineteen & that her father had given consent to the marriage. Similar deception was practised before the clergyman by whom the ceremony of marriage was performed:—Held: in the absence of express statutory requisite consent. It did take place, by virtue of a licence, obtained on the oath of the husband, in which he swears that the young woman is of age. There is no appearance of any consent on the face of that instrument. It is admitted, that she wanted only seventeen days of being of full age, & there is nothing that shows whether that fact was known to the husband or not; though it may reasonably be presumed (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(3) It is undoubtedly true, that consent may be retracted; since the parental authority continues up to the time of marriage. This principle, however, must be taken with reasonable limitations; for it cannot be maintained that this power can be arbitrarily resumed at any moment: that if a parent gives consent on Monday for a marriage the next day, & it is deferred, it would be necessary to renew that consent, or that it would be considered as wearing out or expiring by mere lapse of a short time. When consent has actually been given, it will be necessary that dissent afterwards should be distinctly expressed, & that it should be proved so to have been in the clearest manner (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(4) It will be unnecessary to consider whether the young woman was a minor or not; I will therefore content myself with saying, that if the consent is proved, as I think it is, the minority is not proved on the evidence adduced, opposed as it is to the contrary declarations as to the time of birth. On every part of the case, then, I am of opinion that there is a fatal defect, on the point of consent, by opposite evidence; & on the minority, in the insufficiency of proof, which would restrain the ct. from pronouncing a sentence of nullity on such evidence (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—HODGKINSON v. WILKIE (1795), 1 Hag. 342. —— —— ——.]—(1) In the case of a marriage by licence before a superintendent registrar under Marriage Act, 1836 (c. 85), & Marriage & Registration Act, 1856 (c. 119), although the notice or declaration required by the Acts may contain false statements to the knowledge of both parties, the marriage will nevertheless be valid.

In order to keep her marriage secret from her father whose consent was necessary, a minor was married by licence before the registrar in a false name, the previous statutory notice under Marriage Act, 1836 (c. 85), s. 4, being false to the knowledge of both parties in this & other respects. A petition was subsequently presented by the husband for nullity of marriage based on the above facts. The petition was not defended by the wife, & a decree nisi was granted by Bargrave Deane, J. There was one child of the marriage, an infant, but her birth was not stated in the petition. The child subsequently obtained leave to intervene in the suit under Matrimonial Causes Act, 1907 (c. 12), s. 3, & to appeal against the decree nisi:—Held: the marriage being by licence was not invalidated by reason of the false statements in the notice, & the appeal must therefore be allowed, the decree rescinded, & the petition dismissed.

(2) There is no analogy between the case of a marriage by banns or on notice before a registrar & that of a marriage by licence. In the former the main object is publicity: in the latter identity.

There is a distinction as regards the notice required to be given between a marriage by licence & a marriage by banns. In the case of the latter a wilful & fraudulent misstatement in the notice to the knowledge of both parties will invalidate marriage. But in the case of a marriage by licence a licence can be obtained on payment of a certain sum of money, & after the application for it & before the marriage takes place no publicity is necessary, which seems to show that the principles which have been applied to marriages by banns or on notice without licence ought to have no application to a marriage by licence (LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).

(3) In my opinion, therefore, it comes to this: that in the case of a marriage by licence . . . although both parties may make a false statement as to the names for the purpose of the notice & declaration, yet the marriage will be valid, the consequence of giving the false notice being not to invalidate the marriage, but to expose the parties to penalties of perjury (WARRINGTON, L.J.).—PLUMMER v. PLUMMER, [1917] P. 163; 86 L. In point of law a man cannot change his Christian name, without prejudice to the question, whether he can do so at his confirmation. With regard to surname . . . they can be changed in various ways, as, for instance, by royal licence. I am bound to add that a person can also change his name by use & reputation. If a man has a name which displeases him, there is nothing in law to prevent his changing it to any other he likes better, provided he can get the public to adopt & use the name he prefers (WILLES, J.).—R. v. SMITH (1865), 4 F. & F. 1099.

347. Liability to prosecution for perjury.]—(1) In a suit for nullity of marriage celebrated before a registrar under the Registration Acts (Marriage Act, 1836 (c. 85), & Marriage & Registration Act, 1856 (c. 119)) on the ground that the parties had wilfully intermarried without due notice given to the proper officer, where the notice untruly stated the Christian names, ages, & residences of the parties to which untrue statements resp. was no party, the ct. pronounced the marriage valid because Marriage & Registration Act, 1856 (c. 119), by providing under the pains & penalties of perjury that the party giving the notice should swear that he or she actually had the required consent, has assimilated marriages by notice before a registrar to marriages by licence. Therefore no analogy can be drawn from the cases decided upon marriages by banns; & if any such analogy could be drawn, the false statements in the notice were not made with the sanction of both parties.

371. —— —— Mother as consenting party.]—(1) In 1798 a marriage was solemnised by licence between a man & a female minor. Three years afterwards, in pursuance of a previous agreement, the woman instituted a suit for nullity of marriage, & a decree of nullity was pronounced, on the ground of non-consent of the minor's father. Early in the following year a daughter was born:—Held: evidence, showing that the sentence of the ecclesiastical ct. had been obtained by fraud & collusion, was admissible; &, upon its being satisfactorily proved to the ct., the legitimacy of the daughter was established.

(2) Where a marriage of a minor was celebrated by licence, to which the consent of the father was requisite, his consent, the presumption of law being in favour of marriage & legitimacy, & against the commission of any crime or offence, must be presumed, until proved to the contrary; & the mere fact that the mother's name appeared in the register as the consenting party was not sufficient to contravene the presumption.

It then remains only to consider the question upon the whole of the evidence before us & in this view of the case I think that having regard to the general rule which applies to all cases of presumption "omnia rite acta presumuntur" & to the particular force of that rule as applied to cases of presumption in favour of marriage & legitimacy & against the commission of any crime or offence . . . we are bound to presume that the father was consenting to the marriage & that it was valid (TURNER, L.J.).—HARRISON v. SOUTHAMPTON CORPN. It is now pleaded that the mother was totally unacquainted with the man, which I suppose means personally unacquainted. Consent may be given without this; it is usually given under other circumstances, but it is not required by law, or reason on which the law is founded, that there should be a personal knowledge (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—CRESSWELL v. COSINS (1815), 2 Phillim. 281; 161 E. The cases have gone this length; that, if consent is once given, it shall not be withdrawn by adding terms, that do not go to the propriety of giving the consent (LORD ELDON, C.).—DASHWOOD v. BULKELEY (LORD) (1804), 10 Ves. 230; 32 E. 388. Principles on which court will act—Offending party prevented from acquiring pecuniary benefits by marriage—Without prejudicing pecuniary interests of innocent party & issue.]—In settling the property of a minor, who has been married in fraud of Marriage Act, 1823 (c. 76), the ct. is bound to carry into effect the directions given by the Act for preventing the offending party from deriving any pecuniary benefit from the marriage, as far as may be without prejudicing the pecuniary interests of the innocent party & the issue of the marriage.

In a case where the minor was a female, the ct. refused its sanction to a general power of appointment being given to her, in case she should die before her husband, over one-third of her property, though there should be children, as she might exercise it in favour of her husband to the prejudice of the children; but the ct. approved of a power being given to her in case she survived her husband, though there should be children, of appointing such one-third either by deed or will, as it was for her benefit to be able in that case to make provision for a second marriage. It was no objection to the settlement, that a child dying in the lifetime of the father, after having attained a vested interest under its limitations, might bequeath such interest to the father.—A.-G. v. LUCAS (1848), 2 Ph. 753; 18 L. Immediately before the marriage, the wife was entitled absolutely to a sum of stock outstanding in trustees, & she was also entitled to certain reversionary interests in stock expectant on the death of her mother. SUB-SECT. 1.—ACCORDING TO RITES OF CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A. By Whom solemnised.

408. Priest in Holy Orders.]—(1) Pltf. in an action of crim. con. is bound to prove a marriage valid in all respects, & it is not sufficient primâ facie evidence on his part to show that he & his alleged wife went through a religious ceremony with the bonâ fide intention of thereby contracting a valid marriage, & afterwards lived together as man & wife, in the belief that they had thereby contracted a valid marriage, if in law such marriage was not valid.

In actions of this nature [crim. con.] as in the indictment for bigamy it is necessary for pltf. to show what the cts. call a marriage in fact which we think is an actual marriage valid or avoidable & yet not avoided (PARKE, B.).

(2) A marriage between English subjects, celebrated according to the rites of the Church of England, but not in the presence of a priest in Holy Orders, is invalid at common law.—CATHERWOOD v. CASLON (1844), 13 M. & W. 261; 13 L. J. Ex. 334; 8 Jur. 1076; 153 E. R. 108.

415. Marriage celebrated by person ostensibly in Holy Orders—Not known by parties to be otherwise—Valid.]—It seems to be a generally accredited opinion, that, if a marriage is had by the ministration of a person in the church, who is ostensibly in Holy Orders, & is not known or suspected by the parties to be otherwise, such marriage shall be supported. Parties who come to be married are not expected to ask for a sight of the minister's letters of orders, & if they saw them could not be expected to inquire into their authenticity (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—HAWKE v. CORRI (1820), 2 Hag. 417. (1) It is the doctrine of all courts that everything is to be presumed in favour of a matrimonial union which has produced children & united parties by a long cohabitation; such an union is not to be dissolved unless by some pressing obligations of law (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) The want of consent to a marriage by banns is of no consequence—nor is the non-residence in the parish—as the law has provided that the domicil shall not be looked into (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(3) The native name is primâ facie the true name; at the same time the ct. has thrown out that it is possible that a person may have assumed another name so as to bring it within the description required. It is possible such a name may supersede the original native name (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(4) In this case it is not very distinctly established what was the true name & what the putative name. It is said to be the practice & I believe it is for actors to assume names by which they designate themselves; it is said he went by the name of Faucit. That does not satisfy me that Faucit was the name by which he was universally known (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—DIDDEAR (FALSELY CALLED FAWCIT, OTHERWISE SAVILL) v. FAUCIT (1821), 3 Phillim. 580; 161 E. 419. Place where banns usually published—Mode of proof.]—In an action for crim. con. if pltf.'s marriage was solemnised in a chapel he must give some evidence that banns were usually published there before the passing of Marriage Act, 1753 (c. 33). But it is primâ facie sufficient for this purpose, to produce an old register of marriages solemnised in the chapel before the passing of the Act, & a regular register of banns published there since, & to prove that within the recollection of witnesses who have attended the chapel, marriages have been solemnised & banns published in it from time to time of late years.—TAUNTON v. WYBORN (1809), 2 Camp. 297, N. P.

420. Place licenced by bishop—Principles on which bishop will act in granting licence.]—Five hundred members of the congregation of a chapel petitioned the Bishop of London to grant a licence for the celebration of marriages in the chapel by licence. The application was opposed by the rector of the parish on the grounds that the granting of the licence was opposed to the principles of the parochial system, that it might entail a loss of income to future rectors of the parish, & that the vicinity of the chapel being only three-quarters of a mile from the parish church of S., could not be said to be remote from it, so as to bring the case within the preamble of Marriage Act, 1836 (c. 85), s. 26:—Held: (1) the bishop, if satisfied that it was for the convenience of the inhabitants in the vicinity of the chapel that marriages should be celebrated in it, ought not to be deterred from granting the licence prayed for by considerations arising from our parochial system, or from possible loss of income in future rectors of the parish; (2) in deciding whether or not this was a proper case in which to grant the licence, the word "remote" as used in the preamble, should be interpreted, not as having a narrow but a wide signification; & when the transit from the district in the vicinity of the chapel was delayed from whatever cause, such as to make a real convenience to those residing in the vicinity of the chapel to be married in it, a licence for marrying in the chapel might properly be granted; (3) before granting the licence, the bishop should have some evidence before him of the convenience that would follow the granting of the licence, & there being no such evidence in the present case, it was the duty of the bishop to reject the present application. — Re ST. GEORGE'S, ALBEMARLE STREET, PETITION (1890), Trist. 134.

421. District chapel or church—Power of bishop to licence—Power of ecclesiastical commissioners to licence with bishop's consent.]—The church of C. was built, & had a district assigned to it, under Church Building Act, 1831 (c. 38). In the year 1840 the bishop of the diocese granted, under Marriage Act, 1836 (c. 85), s. 26, his licence for the publication of banns & the solemnisation of marriages in the church, & for taking the same fees in respect thereof as were taken in the mother church by the minister & incumbent thereof for the time being; to which the fees for churchings, baptisms & burials were afterwards added. From the consecration of the church down to the issuing of the writ of mandamus in the present case, two churchwardens were chosen for the church in the manner directed by Church Building Act, 1831 (c. 38), s. 16; one by the incumbent, & the other by the pew renters. Upon demurrer to the return to a mandamus to the incumbent of the district to convene a meeting of the inhabitants to elect a churchwarden, the return alleging that the incumbent & the pew renters had the privilege of electing the churchwardens, & that New Parishes Acts, 1843 (c. 37), s. 15; 1856 (c. 104), s. 14, were inapplicable:—Held: the return was good. The authority contemplated by New Parishes Act, 1856 (c. 104), s. 14, was not a revocable licence by the bishop, but an authority under an order of the comrs. under sect. 11 of that Act; & therefore the district was not brought within sect. 14 of the Act.

Semble: New Parishes Act, 1843 (c. 37), s. 15, is inapplicable to the case of a district constituted, not under that Act, but under Church Building Act, 1831 (c. 38), with a licence by the bishop under Marriage Act, 1836 (c. 85).—R. v. PERRY (1861), 3 E. & E. 640; 30 L. 426. Vestry—Part of church.]—(1) By the law of England affinity is not created by sexual intercourse without marriage. The illicit intercourse of the man with his wife's mother prior to the marriage does not render the marriage void, as being within the prohibited degrees of affinity.

(2) Primâ facie the vestry is part of the church. A petition for sentence of nullity, on the ground that a marriage was solemnised in the vestry which does not aver that the vestry formed no part of the church, is insufficient.

(3) Marriage Act, 1823 (c. 76), s. 28, which requires that two witnesses should be present at a marriage, & should sign the register, is merely directory; & the non-compliance with its directions is no ground for annulling the marriage.—WING v. TAYLOR (FALSELY CALLING HERSELF WING) (1861), 2 Sw. & Tr. 278 ; 30 L. SUB-SECT. 3.—THE CEREMONY.

440. Essential parts of ceremony—General rule.]—(1) It being settled by the decision in R. v. Millis, No. 222, ante, that to constitute a valid marriage by the common law of England, it must have been celebrated in the presence of a clergyman in Holy Orders, the fact that the bridegroom is himself a clergyman in Holy Orders, there being no other clergyman present, will not make the marriage valid.

(2) As to the manner in which a marriage is to be celebrated, the law does not admit of any difference between the marriage of a clergyman & of a layman.

(3) Semble: the decision in R. v. Millis, No. 222, ante, is not to be applied to a case where the presence of a minister in Holy Orders is impossible.

(4) The presence of the priest was not merely for the purpose of securing a religious sanction to the contract of marriage, but one of the objects was to prevent the making of an unlawful contract, which could not be secured unless the priest was a person other than either of the two engaged in the act. The directions contained in the Rubric respecting the opening address to the congregation, the adjuration to the persons about to be married as to confessing any lawful impediment to their union, the putting on the ring, etc., are not absolutely essential to the validity of the marriage; the essential part of the service is the reciprocal taking each other for wedded wife & wedded husband.—BEAMISH v. BEAMISH (1861), 9 H. In 1858 A. was married to another woman, was charged with bigamy & discharged. On the hearing of the charge of desertion, it was contended that there was no proof of deft.'s marriage; it was then proposed to call the woman, but he objected to this on the ground that her evidence was not admissible. 509. —— ——.]—Cohabitation, with the required repute, as husband & wife, is proof that the parties between themselves have mutually contracted the matrimonial relation. It demonstrates that interchange of consent which alone constitutes marriage in Scotland. The law of habit & repute, however, is not peculiar to Scotland; although in countries where the facilities of matrimony are less than in Scotland, the evidence to establish the marriage must be stronger. Marriage, technically, is not constituted, but evidenced, by habit & repute, which, for that purpose, must be uniform & positive. A connection commencing in adultery may, on ceasing to be adulterous, become matrimonial by consent, & may be evidenced by habit & repute, the parties being at liberty to intermarry. The alteration in the character of the connection from adultery to matrimony, need not be indicated by any public act, or by any observable change in the outward demonstration. It is not necessary to prove the specific period when the consent was interchanged.

You must infer the consent to have been given at the first moment when you find the parties able to contract (LORD WESTBURY).

Proof of the legitimacy of the offspring is proof of the validity of the marriage (LORD CHELMSFORD, C.).

It is in the last degree important that cts. of justice should look with the utmost suspicion on the conduct of parties who intentionally keep secret matters at the time when they might be explained, in order to divulge them only when lapse of years may have made contradiction or explanation impossible (LORD CRANWORTH).—BREADALBANE CASE, CAMPBELL v. CAMPBELL (1867), L. H. introduced her to his family, & acknowledged her as his wife. They afterwards went separately to America, & lived separately for more than thirty years, E. P. resuming her maiden name:—Held: there was sufficient evidence of the change in the nature of the connection between J. H. & E. The evidence of neighbours & mere acquaintances of habit & repute must extend through a long series of years to raise the presumption of an agreement on both sides to live together as husband & wife, but if the consensus be once proved, lapse of time is unimportant; & where there is evidence of express acknowledgment, a very short cohabitation in accordance therewith will be sufficient for the purpose.—HILL v. HIBBIT (1870), 25 L. (d) Lapse of Time after Ceremony.

536. General rule.]—The question of the validity of a marriage cannot be tried like any other question of fact which is independent of presumption, for the law will presume in favour of marriage.

There is a strong legal presumption in favour of marriage, particularly after the lapse of a great length of time, & this presumption must be met by strong, distinct, and satisfactory disproof.

The factum of marriage, celebrated by a clergyman of the Church of England in the year 1815, being proved, the maxims "Semper presumuntur pro matrimonio" & "Omnia presumuntur rite et solemniter acta," which raised the presumption of law that a special licence existed authorising the marriage, can only be repelled by strong, distinct, satisfactory, & conclusive evidence to the contrary, & every reasonable possibility of a fact in favour of the presumption must be rebutted.

Where, therefore, two persons had shown a distinct intention to marry, & a marriage had been, in form, celebrated between them, by a regularly ordained clergyman, in a private house, as if by special licence, & the parties, by their acts at the time, showed that they believed such marriage to be a real & valid marriage, the rule of presumption was applied in favour of its validity, though no licence could be found, nor any entry of the granting of it, or of the marriage itself, could be discovered; & though the bishop of the diocese, during whose episcopacy the matter occurred, when examined many years afterwards on the subject, deposed to his belief that he had never granted any licence for such marriage.—PIERS v. PIERS (1849), 2 H. 531 i. Divided repute—Whether sufficient to raise presumption.]—When it is sought to establish the fact of marriage by repute, it is essential that such repute should be general & uniform; a divided repute will not suffice for that purpose.—HENDERSON v. WEIS (1877), 25 Gr. 69.—CAN.

(2) A., then ill of the malady of which he died, &, two days before his death, was married in 1772 in New York to B. by C., an ordained clergyman of the Church of England, then assistant minister of Trinity Church, New York. There was produced (inter alia) in support of the marriage from the custody of the family a certificate signed by C. that he had married A. & B. according to the rites of the Church of England as by law established, & an affidavit, signed by the mayor of New York, to the effect that C. had made an oath of the truth of the statements in the certificate: a will of date anterior to the marriage, by which A. left all his property to B., & of the children then born; copies of letters showing that one of the exors. wrote to his co-exor. in England, a brother of A., stating that he was a witness to the ceremony of marriage; that B. signed himself in A.'s surname: that the children were recognised & taken care of by members of the family as A.'s children; & also War Office records showing that B. received a pension as A.'s widow:—Held: there was ample proof of a legal marriage.—LAUDERDALE PEERAGE (1885), 10 App. Cas. 692, H. 540. Virginia—No ceremony necessary—No registry kept—Effect of war.]—In a suit for dissolution of marriage, it appeared that petitioner & resp. had lived together for five years in Virginia, & were received in society as man & wife; that by the law in force in Virginia, when the cohabitation began, no religious ceremony was necessary to the validity of a marriage, nor was any registry of marriages required to be kept; & that in consequence of war in Virginia, the record of any religious ceremony which might have taken place could not now be obtained:—Held: there was sufficient proof of the marriage.—ROOKER v. ROOKER & NEWTON (1863), 3 Sw. & Tr. 526; 33 L. J. P. M. & A. 42; 9 Jur. N. S. 1329; 12 W. R. 807; 164 E. R. 1379.

541. New Zealand—Ceremony alleged according to native usages—No registry kept—No Christian minister.]—Property was bequeathed to the children of J. A., provided he should marry an English lady. J. A., in 1859, married a woman named Hannah Tuhi Tuhi, one of the offspring of an alleged marriage between a British subject & a native woman of New Zealand named Tuhi Tuhi. The only evidence of the marriage was that of the alleged husband himself, who said that he was a British subject, born abroad, in 1801, of British parents. He further said that he came to reside in New Zealand, in or about 1828, & had resided there ever since; that in 1829 he intermarried with Tuhi Tuhi, & that such marriage was solemnised at a place in New Zealand according to the laws, customs, & usages then in force in New Zealand; that New Zealand was not then a British colony, & there was not then a minister of any Christian church, nor any register of marriages in the island, & that from & after the marriage Tuhi Tuhi had lived & still lived with him as his wife. The deponent did not state the names of his parents. He said that Hannah, before her marriage, was called Tuhi Tuhi, & not by her father's name, in conformity with the customs of the natives of New Zealand; but there was no evidence as to what the laws & customs of the natives of New Zealand were:—Held: the evidence was insufficient to enable the ct. to presume a marriage.—ARMITAGE v. ARMITAGE (1866), L. R. 3 Eq. 343.

Marriage held to have taken place under such circumstances, notwithstanding some evidence leading to the contrary conclusion, & absence of any positive evidence in corroboration.—FOX v. BEARBLOCK (1881), 17 Ch. D. 429; 50 L. J. Ch. 489; 44 L. T. 508; 45 J. P. 648; 29 W. R. 661.

546. ——.]—The English law required a marriage ceremony to validate the marriage contract, but undoubtedly a marriage might be proved by reputation. The reputation might be strong or weak. The presumption of marriage which arose from reputation, LORD CAIRNS said was something much stronger than presumption raised with regard to other facts, & that from cohabitation with reputation a marriage was to be presumed unless there was strong & cogent evidence to the contrary. 542 i. Strong & cogent evidence necessary.]—Where a man & woman have cohabited for such length of time & in such circumstances as to have acquired the reputation of being man & wife, a lawful marriage between them will be presumed & the presumption can be rebutted only by strong & weighty evidence to the contrary.—JOHNSTON v. HAZEN (1914), 43 N. B. R. 154.—CAN.

l. Same presumption raised in respect of another man.]—The presumption arising from reputation may be rebutted by proof that the woman formerly lived with another man so as to raise the same presumption of marriage with him.—GEORGE v. THOMAS (1853), 10 U. C. R. 604.—CAN.

m. By presumption of innocence.]—A married man, persuaded pltf. to go through a pretended marriage ceremony, & afterwards to cohabit with him:—Held: the presumption that deft. had not been guilty of a crime, rebutted any presumption of a marriage ceremony to be drawn from the cohabitation proved.—WRIGHT v. SKINNER (1886), 17 C. P. 317.—CAN.

n. Evidence of one party.]—After the death of the man the evidence of the woman alone was received for the purpose of rebutting the presumption of marriage, although she was then interested in negativing the fact of marriage.—PRESTON v. LYONS (1876), 24 Gr. 142.—CAN.

o. Proof of facts negativing marriage.]—The fact that a woman was living under the control & protection of a man, who generally lived with her & acknowledged her children as his will raise a strong presumption that she is the wife of that man. This presumption will however be rebutted by proof of facts which show that no marriage could have taken place.—CHELLAMMAL v. RANGANATHAM PILLAI (1910), I. L. R. 34 Mad. 277.—IND.

p. Proof of illicit intercourse.]—Applt.'s success depended on his proving his status as the legitimate son of his parents:—Held: the pre-might be general. It might be continuous, it might be undivided or divided, or partially or totally discontinuous. The strength of the presumption must depend on the strength of the case adduced in support of the reputation. The law as to reputation was founded on decency & on morality, & also on improbability of error on the part of the persons among whom the reputation existed & especially so in the case where the reputation was general. The reputation might be among the relations on both sides, among all the friends, among all the acquaintances accompanying the parties throughout their lives, or it might be restricted to persons, or as to localities. Now the present case was, shortly, one of the latter class. The proper mode was to take the evidence as a whole & thus to see whether the presumption of the marriage was sufficiently rebutted (CHITTY, J.).—ANDREWES v. UTHWATT (1886), 2 T. L. R. 895.

H. Onus of Proof.

567. On party seeking to disturb presumption.]—A., a Jew, & B., a Christian woman, cohabited as man & wife for twenty-eight years, & until B.'s death. They had several children, who were brought up as Christians. They cohabited partly in England & partly in foreign parts. There was no evidence of any marriage having been solemnised, but there was general reputation that the parties were married, & proof of the registry of the baptism in England of several of the children as of A. & B. his wife, & that on a judicial proceeding the parties gave evidence on oath as "A. & B. his wife." The relatives of A. never recognised the fact of a marriage, & some of them swore that they did not know even of the reputation of marriage. A., in his will, referred to such of the children as were living as "my legatees." One of the Vice-Chancellors decided that the children were entitled as legitimate children of A. & B. to a fund belonging to A.'s next of kin; & that the onus of proof lay upon those who sought to disturb the general reputation & presumption of marriage under the foregoing circumstances: &, on appeal, the decision was affirmed.—GOODMAN v. GOODMAN (1859), 28 L. 568. ———.]—In Mar. 1821, a lady was married who signed her name "Mary Jones," the husband signing his name "James Masters." Ten days afterwards she was married to S. in her own name. They lived together as reputed husband & wife for many years, & on his death intestate she administered to his estate, receiving a moiety of it as his widow. Shortly after her death a certificate of the first marriage was discovered by pltfs., the next of kin of S., who thereupon filed a bill to have the moiety received by the reputed widow paid to them. Deft. did not deny the first marriage, but contended that S. was the person who solemnised both marriages, the first in the assumed name of "Masters," the second in his own:—Held: the two marriages were solemnised with the same person.

The Vice-Chancellor decided that the burden of proof lay with defts.; the Ct. of Appeal, on the contrary, held that it rested with pltfs., considering the cohabitation for eighteen years, the separation by deed as upon the footing that they were man & wife, & the twelve years of widowhood, during which no suspicion had arisen, as a case that could not be set aside without the strongest & most distinct evidence.—HAVILAND v. MORTIBOY (1859), 32 L. 580. General rule.]—Apart from special statutory provision such as the Legitimacy Declaration Act, 1858 (c. 93), the ct. has no power to entertain a petition for or pronounce a declaration of the validity of a marriage. Such power, being absent in the Ecclesiastical Cts., is not supplied by the operation of Ord. 25, r. 5.—DE GASQUET JAMES (COUNTESS) v. MECKLENBURG-SCHWERIN (DUKE), [1914] P. 53; 83 L. J. 581. Under Legitimacy Declaration Act, 1858 (c. 93)—To declare marriage valid.]—Petitioners were married in 1874, but the wife having previously gone through a ceremony of marriage with a man whose wife was living at the time, petitioners prayed the ct. to declare their marriage had in 1874 valid:—Held: this was included within above Act, s. 1.—SHILSON v. A.-G. (1874), 22 W. R. 831.

582. —— ——.]—On Mar. 5, 1846, the mother & father of petitioner went through a ceremony of marriage at Gretna Green, the lady at that time being fifteen years of age. The certificate was signed by the contracting parties, & by two friends as witnesses to the marriage. The lady having signed her maiden name & made some erasure on the first certificate, a second was signed by the parties & witnesses, & was duly dated. This document was not forthcoming, & the first-mentioned certificate was tendered at the hearing, having been produced by one of the witnesses who attested it, & who had preserved it as a curiosity. After the ceremony at Gretna Green the parties returned home, & were recognised as married by their respective parents & friends. Petitioner was born in Jan. 1847. This petition became necessary to enable him to establish his title to a reversionary interest under the will of a relative, which reversion he had mortgaged. Petitioner's father died in 1878, & the two witnesses were also dead. Petitioner's mother gave the only direct evidence in proof of her marriage:—Held: the marriage was valid by the law of Scotland, & accordingly a declaration of petitioner's legitimacy in terms of the prayer of the petition was made.—GARDNER v. A.-G. (1889), 60 L. T. 839.

583. —— ——.]—In a petition to establish the validity of a marriage under above Act, it appeared that petitioner, who was a British subject with an Irish domicil of origin, & temporarily resident in Japan, had married a Japanese woman in Japan, according to the forms required by the law of the country. Evidence having been adduced which showed that the marriage was valid according to the law of Japan & that by such a marriage petitioner was precluded from marrying any other woman during the subsistence of the marriage: Held: the marriage was valid in this country.—BRINKLEY v. A.-G. 585. —— Admissibility of evidence—Post litem motam.]—(1) Asserted marriage between A. & B. in 1773. In 1800, C., their eldest son, claimed certain property, to which, if legitimate, he was entitled, but which was then in the possession of D., his maternal uncle. D. answered, saying that he should be ready to defend any action which C. might bring, & communicated the fact that the claim had been made to E., the paternal uncle of C. C. replied that his object was to establish his legitimacy, & did not follow up the claim to the property by any suit or action. In a proceeding under above Act to establish the fact of marriage between A. & B.:—Held: a "controversy" had arisen in 1800 between C. & D. upon the very question involved in the litigation, & declarations by members of his family subsequent to 1800 were inadmissible in evidence as made post litem motam.

(2) A deed, dated 1803, to which members of the family were parties, was tendered in evidence for the purpose of proving declarations by them, but was rejected on the ground that the declarations were made post litem motam. It was then tendered as original evidence or evidence of conduct:—Held: it was inadmissible for the purpose for which it was tendered.

(3) Evidence of declarations by members of the family subsequent to 1800 as to statements made by other members of the family concerning the marriage prior to the lis mota was also tendered & rejected as falling within the principle of declarations made post litem motam.

(4) A deed, dated 1826, made between D., certain members of D.'s family & other parties, was tendered & received in evidence, for the purpose of showing that the property claimed by C. had been dealt with adversely to his, A.'s, family subsequent to the controversy between C. & D.

SECT. 1.—OBLIGATION OF HUSBAND AND WIFE TO MAINTAIN ONE ANOTHER.

SUB-SECT. 1.—DUTY OF HUSBAND TO MAINTAIN WIFE.

590. General rule.]—By marriage a wife acquires the right to be maintained according to [illegible] estate & condition of her husband, of which [illegible] she cannot be divested, except by her own [illegible], therefore, [illegible] no defence to an [illegible]ht against a husband for necessaries [illegible] lied to his wife, that at the time they were so supplied, he was confined in an asylum as a dangerous lunatic. [illegible] (1851), 6 [illegible] Q. B. 299; 20 L. J. M. C. 129; 15 L. T. O. S. 118; 15 Jur. 1; 1 W. R. 1; 2 C. & K. 1; 6 Cox, C. C. 549, C. C. R.

591. [illegible], Prisoner was tried & convicted on an indictment under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 96, s. 9, charging that he, having the care & charge of his wife, a lunatic, did abuse & ill-treat her; & also containing a count for a common assault:—Held: prisoner was not a person having the care or charge of a lunatic within the statute, inasmuch as its provisions were not intended to apply to persons whose care or charge arises from natural duty, & so much of the conviction as related to the counts under the statute must be quashed.

(2) The law obliges a husband to take care of his wife independently of her being a lunatic; he does not take care of her because she is a lunatic, but because she is his wife (PARKE, B.).—R. v. RUNDLE (1855), Dears. 594. G. 254; 19 Ves. 394; 35 E. R. 549.

595. [illegible] To provide shelter—Stipulated allowance regularly paid.]—Where husband & wife are separated by common consent, the husband granting the wife a stipulated allowance, which is regularly paid, he is not bound to supply her with shelter; but if he knows, or be informed that she is without shelter, & refuses to provide her with it, in consequence of which her death ensues, semble, he is guilty of manslaughter (even though the wife be labouring under disease which must ultimately prove fatal) if it can be shown that her death was accelerated for want of the shelter which he had denied.—R. v. PLUMMER (1844), 1 Car. & Kir. 600: 8 J. P. 615; 8 Jur. 921.

596. Covenant of indemnity against maintenance.]—D. having more than £3,000 per annum, married M. who had £10,000 portion, & settled £1,000 per annum upon her for her jointure, & the greatest part of D.'s estate was settled upon the first & every other son in tail male successively. D. run greatly in debt, & J., his eldest son, being of full age, D. upon a calculation of his debts, & the value of his estate for life, with impeachment of waste, agreed with J. to convey all his estate to him, & J. covenanted to pay all D.'s debts, & to allow him £500 per annum rentcharge for his life; & further (upon which the question arose) that J. should indemnify D. from all debts, charges & expenses for the maintenance of M., his mother, she being then separate from D. by consent. M. brought a bill against D. & J. the son to have an allowance for her maintenance:—Held: the son by his covenant had taken upon himself the charge of maintaining M. & stood in the place of the husband, who was bound to give his wife an allowance if he voluntarily separated from her; the son must be taken to be in nature of a trustee for the wife, so far as a reasonable allowance for her maintenance; though the son offered to take her to his house, yet she was not bound to accept that offer; for though he stood in the place of the husband as to her maintenance, & a husband is not bound to allow anything to his wife for maintenance if he offers to take her home, yet in this case here lay no such obligation upon the wife to live with the son; & though she refused, she ought to have a reasonable allowance.—DUTTON v. DUTTON (1715), 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 150; 22 E. R. 128, L. C.

597. Execution of fraudulent deed of assignment.]—(1) Not maintaining his wife is a breach of the husband's recognisance to keep the peace towards her.

It is a breach of the peace in the husband not to maintain his wife, & if articles of the peace were exhibited by the wife against the husband, & he entered into a recognisance, to not maintain her would be a forfeiture of his recognisance, by which he binds himself bene et honeste tractare her (per CUR.).

(2) A husband voluntarily & causelessly deserted his wife & went to Maryland, having first made a fraudulent assignment of all his real & personal estate in trust, to pay his debts. The ct. decreed the wife a maintenance out of this estate, though by articles of intermarriage, she had the interest of £4,000 for pin-money.—COLMER v. COLMER (1729), Mos. 118; 25 E. R. 304, L. C.

A. In General.

607. Whether husband has right to custody of wife.]—A wife cannot, either by herself or her prochein ami, bring a homine replegiando against her husband, for he has by law a right to the custody of her & may, if he think fit, confine her (per CUR.).—ATWOOD v. ATWOOD (1718), Prec. 608. —— Wife living apart under deed of separation improperly executed.]—If a husband, by a deed of separation executed by himself, but not executed by either of the trustees, give his wife licence to live where she pleases, he is not justified in entering the house of a third person to reclaim his wife, as being improperly harboured there; & the husband, before doing so, should at least have given distinct notice to the third person, that, as far as by law he could, he revoked the licence.—LEWIS v. PONSFORD (1838), 8 C. & P. 687, N. P.

609. ——.]—(1) Where there is a restraint of personal liberty of a feme covert, the ct., in favorem libertatis, will grant a habeas corpus, directed to the husband, to bring up the body of his wife.

(2) Where it appears, from the return made to the writ of habeas corpus by the husband, that the restraint on the wife's person arose from her own breach of duty, & that the object & declared purpose of the wife was to escape from her husband, & to live apart from him, as she had previously done for four years, the ct. will restore her to her husband, though there is no reason from her past conduct to apprehend that she will avail herself of her absence from his control to injure either his honour or his property.

The husband has, by the common law of England, a right to the custody & control of his wife: she is under his guardianship, & he is entitled to prevent her from indiscriminate intercourse with the world, by enforcing cohabitation & a respecting Homesteads.]—The question whether a wife is or is not entitled to alimony should & could more properly be decided in the ordinary action with the usual procedure than in an issue raised by the husband on an application under Act respecting Homesteads, 1915, c. 29, for an order dispensing with her signature.—Re HOMESTEAD ACT, C.'S CASE, [1919] 3 W. s. When living apart—Wife in public lunatic asylum.]—There is no liability on the part of a husband for the support of his wife while confined in a public lunatic asylum where no order has been made under 1882 Act, s. 288, for payment by him towards her maintenance.—R. v. ROBINSON (1884), 2 N. t. —.]—A husband brought an action in the Sheriff Ct., in which he offered his wife aliment, & craved an order on her to remove from the house in which they resided, & interdict against her returning thereto:—Held: he was entitled to the order but the ct. would not have pronounced the order if there had not been an offer of aliment made by the husband.—MACLURE v. MACLURE, [1911] S. C. 200.—SCOT.

a. Only wife can sue—In respect of failure to maintain.]—Deft. having seduced pltf.'s sister was induced to marry her by the solicitations of her father, who professed his willingness in such case to support her. Immediately after the marriage deft. left his wife, who, without notice to her husband, went to live with her brother, with the intention of charging her husband with her support:—Held: pltf. could not recover.—MANNING v. (1873), 9 N. S. R. 261.

CAN.

PART III. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 4.

b. Question of fact.]—Held: there was evidence upon which the judge could properly find against the accused; it is purely a question of fact whether the acts proved are of such a character that the health of the wife is likely, by reason of those acts, to be permanently injured.—R. v. BOWMAN (1898), 31 N. S. R. 403.—CAN.

c. Where criminal proceedings commenced—Whether civil proceedings can be substituted—Without notice.]—An order was made by two justices of the peace, purporting to act under Deserted Wives' Maintenance Act, R. S. O. 1897, c. 167, whereby defts. described as an Indian of the Six Nations, was directed to pay $1 a week for his wife's maintenance; but, it appearing that the information was laid under Criminal Code, s. 242, under which all proceedings were had, & that it was only at the last moment, when the justices were drawing up their minutes of the order, that they decided to proceed under the first named Act without any notice thereof to deft. the order was quashed.—Re WOODRUFF (1908), 16 O. L. R. 348; 11 O. W. R. 430.—CAN.

d. What amounts to criminal neglect.]—Held: By a plea of "guilty" deft. admitted that he neglected his wife, but he could not be convicted for that, & his plea could not be construed as an admission that he neglected to provide her with necessaries in circumstances which would render him liable to conviction, nor as an admission that he neglected his children as well as his wife; &, therefore, deft. must be discharged.—R. v. CHITNITA (1914), 27 W. L. R. 268; 16 D. L. R. 241.—CAN.

e. Jurisdiction of court—How determined—Whether by domicil.]—Held: upon an application for an order for payment under Deserted Wives Maintenance Act (R. S. O. 1914, Ch. 152), the jurisdiction of the ct. is determined by the place where desertion took place, & not by the husband's domicil.—Re HANLAN (1921), 64 D. L. R. 110; 50 O. L. R. 20.—CAN.

f. Refusing to provide necessaries—Whether ground for prosecution.]—The fact that a wife is maintained by the charity of others or gains her livelihood by her own means or exertions forms no ground for a prosecution under Criminal Code, s. 242 A, which was not intended as a means of enforcing the husband's civil responsibility for the wife's necessaries, either at her own instance or that of those who supply them.—R. v. BULLARD, [1924] 1 W. h. —— Admissibility of evidence.]—Upon an indictment of the prisoner under Criminal Code, 1892, s. 210 (2), for omitting without lawful excuse to provide necessaries for his wife, evidence is admissible on behalf of the prisoner of an agreement, at the time of the marriage, between him & the person who became his wife, that they were to live at their respective homes & be supported as before the marriage until the prisoner obtained a situation where he could earn sufficient for their maintenance.—R. v. ROBINSON (1897), 28 O. R. 407.—CAN.

common residence: therefore, where a wife appears at masked balls unprotected by the presence & without the permission of her husband he has a right to restrain her from the power to frequent such places.

A husband, in order to prevent his wife eloping, with a view to live apart from him against his will, may legally confine her in his own dwelling, & deprive her of her liberty for an indefinite time, using no hardship or unnecessary restraint.

Semble: such restraint would amount to imprisonment & be illegal, & the ct. would afford redress, unless the wife makes an undue use of her liberty by going into lewd company or squandering her husband's estate.

When a wife absents herself from her husband on account of no misconduct on his part & he afterwards by stratagem obtains possession of her person, & she declares her intention of leaving him again, whenever she can, he has a right to restrain her of her liberty, until she is willing to return to a performance of her conjugal duties.—Re COCHRANE (1840), 8 Dowl. 630; 4 Jur. 534.

m. —— Husband & wife living together.]—Deft. was sued for (1) enticing away & (2) alienating the affections of pltf.'s wife, & the jury assessed damages upon each claim separately:—Held: the action was maintainable notwithstanding that his wife was still living with pltf. & that the jury had not found that adultery had been committed; but pltf. had suffered no damages beyond the loss of his wife's affections, love, services, & society, & should be confined to the damages assessed by the jury upon the claim for alienation.—BANNISTER v. THOMPSON (1914), 32 O. Shortly after pltf.'s return, the wife confessed her misconduct, notwithstanding which they remained together in their own house, & were so living when action was brought. The cause of action alleged was alienation of affection, causing loss of consortium:—Held: while this action was competent, although the husband & wife were living together, no damages for the loss of consortium, which was the gist of the action, could properly be awarded upon the evidence adduced, for it was not shown that the husband had lost the affection of his wife or had been deprived of her love, services, & society; & the action was rightly withdrawn from the jury.—BALLARD v. MONEY (1920), 47 O. L. R. 132; 52 D. L. R. 371; 17 O. W. N. 472.—CAN.

643. —— Advice given at request of wife.]—The question which they [the jury] have to decide is under what circumstances S. left her husband, or stayed away after she had left him? If S. asked defts. for their advice, & they merely approved of her leaving, defts. would not be liable if they gave that advice in good faith. If the advice was gratuitous it might be different. If defts. persuaded her to leave or procured her leaving, then they would be liable. Would S. have left if defts. had not interfered? The evidence goes to show that she would not. In fact the admission of deft. indicates that he did all he could to get her to go. If the jury think that defts. induced, or incited the wife to leave her husband, & in consequence she did leave, they must give such damages as would be reasonable in the circumstances, having regard to some extent to pltf.'s position in the world & what he has lost by deft.'s only doing his duty as a kind friend, as with his having advised the wife to leave her husband:—Held: the trial judge should have withdrawn the case from the jury for lack of evidence, & granted a nonsuit.—BRIZARD v. HEYNE (1914), 27 W. B. By Wife.

644. Right to damages — Slander of wife by imputing unchastity—Sufficiency of special damage.]—(1) Qu.: whether a wife can maintain an action against a third person for words occasioning to her the loss of the consortium of the husband?

(2) If she can, the words must be such that from them the loss of the consortium follows as a natural & reasonable consequence.

Where therefore a wife (her husband being joined for conformity as a pltf.) brought an action to recover damages from A. for slander uttered by him to her husband, imputing to her that she had been almost seduced by B. before her marriage, & that her husband ought not to let B. visit at his house, & the ground of special damage alleged was, that in consequence of the slander the husband forced her to leave his house & return to her father, whereby she lost the consortium of her husband:—Held: the cause of complaint thus set forth would not sustain the action, for the alleged ground of special damage did not show (in the conduct of the husband) a natural & reasonable consequence of the slander.

(3) The loss by the wife of her maintenance by the husband, occasioned by slander uttered by a third person, may be made the subject of a claim for damages, but such loss cannot be presumed to have so arisen: it must be distinctly averred.—LYNCH v. KNIGHT (1861), 9 H. SUB-SECT. 4.—CONDITIONAL GIFT INDUCING SEPARATION.

646. Condition attached to legacy — Providing fixed residence for wife.]—Testatrix by her will, in 1867, gave the residue of her property to her niece, the wife of W. (who was carrying on a large business as a corn miller at S.) for life, with gifts over; & by a codicil, in 1869, she directed that all interest given by her will to her niece should go over, should she not cease to reside in S., within eighteen months of testatrix's death:—Held: as this was a condition which would require the niece to omit the doing of something that was a duty, it was void.

Testatrix knew that pltf. was married, & that her ceasing to reside at S. could not depend upon herself, but upon her husband. It is a condition imposed upon a person who is not the person that must really perform it. Pltf., a married woman, considering that it was her duty to perform the condition so that there should be no forfeiture of the property, has been obliged to neglect another & more important duty in quitting her husband's house, & going to reside elsewhere (SIR JOHN STUART, V.-C.).—WILKINSON v. WILKINSON (1871), L. M. & her husband were married some years before the date of the will, & never lived apart till some time after the death of testator. Testator's son was living & an infant:—Held: the bequest to M. was not to be construed as a gift to her during the joint lives of herself, & her husband until the son attained twenty-one, upon a condition, which might have been rejected as against the policy of the law, that she & her husband should not live together, but as a limited gift of weekly payments to be made during a period the commencement & duration of which were fixed in a way which the law does not allow, & the gift was void.—Re MOORE, TRAFFORD v. MACONOCHIE (1888), 39 Ch. 654. ——.]—Before Married Women's Property Act a married woman could at law have no personal property, but, in order to secure to her the equitable interest in property, it was vested in trustees for her, & then at law the property was not hers but that of the trustees. If money was bequeathed to a married woman without the intervention of trustees it went to her husband. Married Women's Property Act was passed to alter this state of the law, & now by virtue of that Act money & other personal property of a married woman does not pass to her husband. For this purpose a married woman & her husband are no longer in law one person; they are two persons, just as if they were two men (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—RAMSAY v. MARGRETT, [1894] 2 Q. B. 18; 63 L. 656. Rights of husband surviving wife intestate—Personalty.]—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), has not altered the devolution of the undisposed of separate personalty of a married woman. Accordingly, on the death of a married woman without disposing of her separate personalty, the quality of separate property ceases, & the right of the husband to such undisposed of personalty accrues as if the separate use had never existed. A married woman who has a power of appointment over certain trust funds, & was also possessed of separate estate, her title to which had accrued before Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), died in 1887, having in the same year made a will, by which she exercised her power of appointment over the trust fund & appointed exors., but made no disposition of her separate property. Probate of the will was granted to the exors. according to the altered practice introduced by the Probate Rules of 1887, i.e. in the ordinary form without any exception or limitation:—Held: (1) on the death of testatrix the title of her husband to her undisposed of separate estate accrued, & the exors. of her will became trustees of it for him, & not for the next of kin of testatrix; (2) the expenses of proving the will, including the probate duty, must be apportioned ratably between the appointed & undisposed of property in the same manner in which they would have been apportioned under a grant cæterorum before the change in the form of the grant: but the costs of the proceedings in which the questions were determined must fall upon the undisposed of property, as they were occasioned by a contest between the husband & the next of kin.—Re LAMBERT'S ESTATE, STANTON v. LAMBERT (1888), 39 Ch. 657. —— ——.]—(1) Since the coming into operation of the amended rules 15 & 18 of the Probate Rules (Non-Contentious), which provide that probate of the will of a married woman shall take the form of ordinary grants of probate without any exception or limitation, a husband who obtains probate of his wife's will in general form is not deemed to have assented to the will as a disposition of property which she had no right to dispose of by will without his assent.

(2) Upon the true construction of the will the property in dispute was not included in the bequest, &, therefore, the question of assent did not arise.—Re ATKINSON, WALLER v. ATKINSON, [1899] 2 Ch. 1; 68 L. J. Ch. 404; 80 L. T. 505; 47 W. R. 469; 43 Sol. Jo. 455, C. A.

659. Release of general power of appointment—By wife.]—Testator, who died before 1882, by his will gave property to trustees upon trust to pay the income equally to two daughters for their respective lives for their separate use, & as to the capital declared that the same, being equally divided, should be subject to their respective appointments by will, & assigned & paid over accordingly, & in default of appointment, to their exors., administrators, or assigns respectively. The trustees had some prior payments to make out of the capital. The two daughters married after 1882:—Held: on releasing their powers of appointment they were entitled to a declaration that they were entitled to their shares as absolute owners.

The direction to pay to the exors., administrators, or assigns of the life-tenant is, in such a connection, equivalent to a gift of the reversionary interest to the life-tenant herself: & by virtue of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), the reversionary interest in such a case now coalesces with the life interest, while the testamentary power can be released. There is, however, no occasion for an express release of the power where the capital is actually paid over to the married woman, a sufficient release being implied from the circumstance.—Re DAVENPORT, TURNER v. KING,

At the date of the marriage the wife was entitled in reversion under her parents' marriage settlement to certain policy moneys & the proceeds of sale of certain furniture, subject to the life interests of her parents therein. By the deaths of her parents during her coverture the wife became entitled in possession to the property to which at the date of her marriage she was so entitled in reversion :—Held : (1) upon the assumption that the property was the property of the wife & therefore capable of being bound by her covenant, that upon the true construction of the settlement, notwithstanding that at the date of her marriage she was entitled to the property in reversion, yet, as she became entitled thereto in possession during the coverture, the property was, within the meaning of the covenant, property to which during the coverture the wife might become entitled in possession, & was therefore caught by the settlement ; (2) if the property were not bound by the covenant of the wife, then, as the effect of sect. 19 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), is to render sect. 2 of that Act as if it were non-existent in the case of a settlement which would have bound the property but for that Act, the property on falling into possession belonged to the husband in right of his wife & he became bound by his covenant to settle the same.—Re CROOK'S SETTLEMENT, Re GLASIER'S SETTLEMENT, CROOK v. PRESTON, [1923] 2 Ch. 339 ; 92 L. 669. Spes successionis — Not a contingent interest.]—A spes successionis is not a title to property by English law. A woman, married before Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), who has a mere spes successionis to property, as one of a class of possible next of kin, has not a "contigent title" within the meaning of sect. 5 of that Act. A testator, who died in 1879, bequeathed a sum of money to trustees, upon certain trusts, & subject thereto in trust for "such person or persons as at the time of the failure of the preceding trusts would be my next of kin, & entitled to my personal estate under the statutes for the distribution of the personal estates of intestates, if I had then died intestate." The preceding trusts failed on May 21, 1886. A woman, married in 1857, was one of the persons who would have been next of kin of testator if he had died on May 21, 1886. She made a will, dated in 1889, & died in the same year, leaving her husband surviving :—Held : the property of the married woman under the gift in favour of testator's next of kin first accrued to her in title & interest on May 21, 1886, &, therefore, under Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 5, she was entitled to it for her separate use, & it passed under her will.—Re PARSONS, STOCKLEY v. PARSONS (1890), 45 Ch. In 1866 J., another daughter of testatrix, married, & by her marriage settlement covenanted that any real or personal property to which she then was entitled for any estate or interest whatsoever in reversion, remainder, or expectancy should be settled upon the trusts of the settlement. W. died in 1912 without issue, & leaving J. her sole next of kin :—Held : (1) the interest which J. had at the date of the settlement in the settled share of W. was either a mere spes successionis, or, having regard to the authorities, including Re Parsons, Stockley v. Parsons, No. 669, ante, must be treated as such, & therefore was not assignable at law ; (2) inasmuch as the covenant did not relate to any defined spes successionis it was too vague to be enforceable in equity ; & consequently the property to which J. became entitled as next of kin of her sister was not comprised in the settlement.—Re MUDGE, [1914] 1 Ch. 115 ; 83 L. During the coverture, property of the wife was reduced into possession by the husband, & settled upon the trusts of the settlement. In 1883 the wife became entitled, as one of the next of kin of a deceased testator, to a share of undisposed of personalty :—Held : the operation of Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 5, conferring on women married before Jan. 1, 1883, the right to hold & dispose of as their separate property all real & personal property accruing after that date, was not displaced by sect. 19 of the Act, which saves "any settlement or agreement for a settlement made or to be made, whether before or after marriage, respecting the property of any married woman" ; but that sect. 19 referred only to settlements made by & binding upon married women ; &, therefore, that the settlement, so far as it purported to be made by the wife was entitled to the undisposed of personalty as her separate property.—Re QUEADE'S TRUSTS (1885), 54 L. J. Ch. 786; 53 L. T. 74; 33 W. R. 816; 1 T. L. R. 448; 29 Sol. Jo. 99.

Under the will, made in 1884, of her father, who died in the same year, the wife became entitled to a share of personalty exceeding £1,000, & not limited to her separate use:—Held: having regard to Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 10, the effect of which is to limit the operation of sect. 5 by preventing the provisions of marriage settlements from being interfered with or affected by withdrawing therefrom property, which independently of the Act must have been brought into settlement, the share of the wife under her father's will had not been made separate estate so as to fall within the exception, but was bound by the covenant to settle after acquired, other than separate, property.

674. —— ——.]—The effect of Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 19, is so to modify the operation of Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 5, that the persons interested under a settlement of the property of a married woman are not by sect. 5 deprived of any benefit to which they would have been entitled under the settlement in case sect. 5 had not been enacted. An ante-nuptial settlement executed in 1870, contained a covenant by the husband with the trustees that he would settle, or concur with the wife in settling, any property which during the coverture should come to her or to him in her right. The settlement did not contain any such covenant by the wife, or any joint agreement or declaration to that effect. In 1883, on the death of the wife's mother, the wife became entitled under her will to a share of the mother's personal estate, which was not limited by the will to the separate use of the wife:—Held: this share was, notwithstanding the Act of 1882, bound by the covenant in the settlement.—HANCOCK v. HANCOCK (1888), 38 Ch. On her marriage a settlement of her property not sanctioned under Infants Settlements Act, 1845 (c. 43), was made under which she took the first life estate with a restraint on anticipation. On her coming of age the fund was paid to her under an order of the ct. The Ct. of Appeal reversed this order, & declared her liable to refund on the ground that the fund was subject to the settlement. She refunded part but was unable to refund the remainder which she had spent. After this the exors. of the will paid to the trustees of the settlement an arrear of income which they had in hand:—Held: so much of this income as accrued between the married woman's attaining twenty-one & the order declaring her ability to refund must be retained in part satisfaction of her liability to refund.—Re DIXON, DIXON v. SMITH (1887), 35 Ch. Argued that the legacy, by virtue of Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 5, was the wife's separate property: & that wife could disaffirm the settlement:—Held: on the authority of Hancock v. Hancock, No. 674, ante, the legacy was bound by the settlement.—Re SHELTON, CHANCELLOR v. BROWN (1891), 7 T. In Oct. 1891, the lady attained twenty-one, when she disaffirmed the settlement, & then claimed to be absolutely entitled to this sum of £1,000:—Held: the reasons given in Hancock v. Hancock, No. 674, ante, as to the effect of Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 19, on the operation of sect. 5 of that Act, were equally applicable to modify the operation of sect. 2, &, consequently, the sum of £1,000 was effectually included in the settlement by the husband's assignment, & could not be dealt with by the wife, notwithstanding her repudiation of the settlement when she attained twenty-one.—STEVENS v. TREVOR-GARRICK, [1893] 2 Ch. 307; 62 L. By the testatum the wife, in pursuance of the agreement, declared that the trustees should hold the property on certain trusts. There was no declaration or covenant by the husband. one the wife repudiated the settlement :—Held : there was an agreement between the husband & the trustees, & the recital of that agreement was operative as between the parties to it, although unaccompanied by any obligation binding on the infant wife. The husband's marital right was affected by the agreement ; there was, therefore, a settlement which would have bound the property if Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), had not been passed, & the wife was not entitled to have the trust funds transferred to her as her separate estate.—BUCKLAND v. BUCKLAND, [1900] 2 Ch. 534 ; 69 L. Contingent interest to wife—Separate use added by statute.]—By a marriage settlement made in 1878 a fund was settled upon trust to pay the income to the wife for life, & during her then intended coverture such income was to be for her separate use, & after her death the fund was to be held in default of children in trust for such persons as the wife should during coverture by will, & when discovert by deed or will appoint, & in default, if the wife should survive the husband, in trust for her, her exors., administrators, & assigns. The husband died in 1880. There was no issue of the marriage. The lady married again, after Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), & no settlement was made on that marriage. Upon a summons taken out by her & her second husband to have it determined whether she could release the power of appointment by will given to her by the settlement, & call for a transfer of the settled property :—Held : if the lady had come to the ct. immediately before her second marriage she would have been entitled to have the settled property transferred to her, & Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), had added the incident of separate use to her interest in such property, so that the lady & her husband were now entitled to have that property made over to them without any release by her of the power.—Re ONSLOW, PLOWDEN v. GAYFORD (1888), 39 Ch. By his will made subsequently to the Act her father bequeathed a third of his residuary estate to the trustees of the settlement to be held upon the trusts therein expressed & declared. On a summons taken out by the lady asking for a declaration that her contingent interest under the will was held by her to her separate use :—Held : the incident of separate use was added by the statute, & her contingent interest under the will was therefore disposable by her.—Re WILLIAMS, WILLIAMS v. GRANT (1897), 76 L. A sum of consols was standing in the name of three persons, one of whom was a married woman, who had been deserted by her husband, & was entitled beneficially to the stock under Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (c. 93), s. 7. Those persons applied to the Bank of England to be permitted to transfer the stock without the concurrence of the husband of the married woman ; & the bank having refused :—Held : the bank could not be compelled to permit such a transfer.

On the death of C., during the coverture, A. became entitled in possession to the money, & joined her husband, deft., in a petition to the Ct. of Ch. for payment of it to the husband, "in right of his wife" : & the ct. having made an order directing the money to be so paid, it was, in pursuance of such order, paid to the garnishee under a power of attorney from the husband alone, of which, however, the wife was fully cognisant :—Held : this was clearly money to which the wife "became entitled," within the meaning & operation of Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (c. 93), s. 7, but that she had, by joining in the petition to the Ct. of Ch. divested herself of the separate property in the money, & that it thereby became the property of the husband, & as such was liable to attachment at the suit of his creditor, pltf. in the hands of the garnishee, & they accordingly made absolute a rule to enter a verdict for pltf.

If A. could satisfy the Ct. of Ch. that she had not intended to part with her property in & control over the money, & to give it to her husband unconditionally, & was not aware at the time that she had done so, & it were found that the ct. had not been made aware of the true nature of the transaction when the petition was presented, it would even now order the return of the money (AMPHLETT, B.).—LANE v. OAKES (1874), 30 L. Subsequently the wife of A. filed the usual certificate & consent, but the business continued as before, except that S. sold the property covered by the bill of sale to the wife of A. for $750, & she paid him $250 of her own money on account, & gradually paid him other sums out of the earnings of the business. 702. —— —— Wholesale business.] — A woman in 1855 entered the service of a man as housekeeper in a house which was in his occupation but was not his ordinary place of residence. He shortly afterwards engaged to marry her. In 1861 she commenced the business of preserving fruit, which was begun upon a small scale, but gradually became a large wholesale business. It was carried on by her in her own name ; she kept a separate banking account, & he admitted that it was her own business, & was managed solely by her, though he sometimes assisted. In 1874 he married her. After the marriage the business was carried on by her as before, in her maiden name ; her husband resided in the house where it was carried on, but it did not appear that he took any further part in it than he had done before the marriage. 705. —— ——.]—A lady, who was carrying on the business of a ladies' school, was married in 1862. A settlement was executed on the marriage, which did not in any way refer to or affect to deal with the business carried on by her or the goodwill thereof. After the marriage she continued to carry on the school. Her husband lived in the house, but he did not take any part in the business nor assist in any manner in the tuition. The prospectuses, etc., of the school were in her name. Out of the earnings of the school the wife contributed to, if she did not substantially pay, the household expenses. Some of the earnings were invested by the husband in his own name, & another portion was invested in the purchase of the lease of the premises in which the school was carried on. The husband died in 1877. He did not in any way affect to deal with the school property by his will, & he had not ostensibly by any act of his treated it as his own property. Upon his death the question arose between the exors. of his will, under which his infant children were interested, & his widow, who survived him, as to who was entitled to the goodwill, property, & effects of the business :—Held : upon the evidence, the business was carried on by the wife separately from her husband within Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (c. 93), s. 1 ; it made no difference that the marriage took place before the passing of that Act ; & the goodwill, stock, & effects belonging to the business, & all investments out of the earnings of the business since the passing of the Act, were the property of the wife.—Re DEARMER, JAMES v. DEARMER (1885), 53 L. entitled to own share—Ability to contract in respect of share.]—Since Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), a gift of chattels can be made to a husband & wife jointly as effectively as it can to two persons between whom the marriage relationship does not exist. A husband & wife can make a valid contract with respect to the ownership or enjoyment of chattels in their joint possession as effectively as two persons can between whom the marriage relationship does not exist, & such a contract & its terms may be inferred from the terms & manner on & in which the parties have dealt & acted. If a husband & wife each have some cash & income, & they mutually arrange that her money & his shall form a joint fund kept in an account in the husband's name for the purpose of their joint establishment, & the ct. can infer that things have been purchased by the two & paid for out of the joint fund, such things are not exclusively the husband's in the sense that on deserting his wife he can bring an action to recover possession of them & claim to be entitled to deprive her of any right to them.—HUNT v. HUNT (1908), 25 T. L. R. 132.

709. Gift to husband & wife & third party—Will made before Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75)—Operating after Act.]—(1) In applying above Act to wills made before the passing of above Act, care should be taken not to give it a retrospective effect beyond what is unavoidable.

(2) Above Act does not expressly or impliedly require a will made before above Act came into operation to receive a different construction from that which it would have received had above Act not passed. The only rights altered by above Act are those inter se of husband & wife. A gift by will to A. & B. & his wife, made before but coming into operation after above Act came into operation, which according to the rule of construction prevailing before above Act would have been a gift in moieties, one to A., & the other to B. & his wife, is, notwithstanding above Act, still divisible into moieties; but by the operation of above Act the moiety given to B. & his wife is given to them as joint tenants as if they were unmarried, & the wife takes one-half of that moiety to her separate use.

(3) Qu: whether such a gift in a will made after above Act came into operation would be divisible into moieties or thirds.—Re MARCH, MANDER v. HARRIS (1884), 27 Ch. D. 166; 54 L. J. Ch. 143; 51 L. T. 380; 32 W. R. 941, C. A.

710. ——Husband & wife to take one moiety—Rule unaffected by statute.]—The rule of construction whereby, under a gift to a husband & wife & a third person, the husband & wife take only one moiety between them, has not been altered by Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75). A testator, by his will made in 1887, directed that a share of his residuary estate should be divided between his "sister M., D., her husband, & H., her step-daughter, in equal parts." M. & D. were married previously to the commencement of Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75):—Held: M. & D. each took one-fourth, & H. one-half of the share, the one-fourth of M. being her separate property according to the Act.—Re JUPP, JUPP v. BUCKWELL (1888), 39 Ch. SECT. 8.—PARAPHERNALIA.

712. Effect of Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75).]—Above Act has not abolished the general law as to gifts of paraphernalia. A husband, who married after the passing of above Act made his wife valuable presents of jewellery. He stated that he only allowed her the use of them, she that he gave them to her absolutely; & her evidence was considered more to be relied upon than his. It also appeared that he made the presents in the same manner & with the same words that he had used in making her presents before marriage, & never gave her to understand that the jewels were only lent to her, till he took proceedings for a divorce. Most of the presents were made on Christmas Days or her birthdays, or as "peace offerings" after disputes; & she, to his knowledge, kept the jewels in her possession or at a bank in cases stamped with her initials:—Held: the question whether a gift to a married woman constitutes paraphernalia was to be determined on the same principle as before the Act, & the proper inference from the facts above stated was that the jewels were not paraphernalia, but the separate property of the wife.—TASKER v. TASKER, [1895] P. 1; 64 L. J. P. 36; 71 L. T. 779; 43 W. R. 255; 11 T. L. R. 51; 11 R. 619.

Annotation:— Consd. Masson, Templier v. De Fries, [1909] 2 K. B. 831.

713. ——.]—Wearing apparel purchased by a married woman for her personal use with money supplied for the purpose by her husband is primâ facie her separate property, &, in the absence of evidence to rebut this presumption or to limit or qualify her possessory title, cannot be claimed by the husband as against an execution creditor of the wife.

By [common law] the widow could not claim goods as her paraphernalia by reason of any gift from her husband, for such a gift was at common law impossible. The goods were the property of the husband & at his disposal in his lifetime, & liable to be taken in execution by his creditors, or to answer the claims of his creditors after his death (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).

[Paraphernalia] was a right given by the common law to a widow; it was not a right of the husband's at all, but was a limitation of the legal rights of his exors. or administrators after his death.

Since above Act has destroyed the husband's right to all his wife's personal chattels & has enabled her to acquire & own them as her own, either absolutely or subject to any lawful condition to which she may agree as if she were a feme sole, a right which was merely a limitation or an exception out of the former legal right of the husband has, in my opinion, no longer any existence. The widow's right arose solely by way of exception out of the generality of the husband's common law right to all her property. . . . I am of opinion that since above Act the old common law exception of paraphernalia from the husband's right to his wife's chattels personal has ceased to exist (FARWELL, L.J.).

It appears to me that the only occasion on which an issue as to paraphernalia might perhaps still be raised is a dispute as to the possession of property in the nature of ornaments & the like articles between a wife & the representative of her deceased husband. As between husband & wife, during their lifetime, or between either of them & the execution creditor of the other the only question as to the property in such articles can be whether they belong to the husband as his own or are the separate property of the wife (KENNEDY, L.J.).

There can be no question of paraphernalia during the husband's life.—MASSON, TEMPLIER & CO. v. DE FRIES, [1909] 2 K. B. 831 ; 79 L. J. K. B. 24 ; 101 L. T. 476 ; 25 T. L. R. 781 ; 53 Sol. Jo. 744, C. A.

723. Arrears of income of settled property.]—By a marriage settlement a sum of money, secured by a bond given to the trustees by J., was settled for the wife's separate use for life, with limitations over. J. was left in the management of the trust estate, which he retained for some years at interest, & ultimately invested in his own name jointly with that of the surviving trustee. After the death of the husband, some arrears of the income remaining in the hands of J. were invested by him for the benefit of the lady, & he informed her of the fact. Shortly after this she married again:—Held: the arrears invested were not separate estate, but passed to the second husband.—SPICER v. SPICER, SPICER v. DAWSON, LAWFORD v. SPICER (1857), 24 Beav. 365; 26 L. 724. Property purchased with savings.]—Testatrix, having a general power of appointment reserved to her by her marriage settlement, by her will, gave a devise & bequest of all her residuary estate, except so much thereof as might remain subject to the trusts of her marriage settlement by reason of no specific disposition of any part thereof having been made by her under the power for that purpose therein contained, & of which that general devise & bequest was not to be taken as in execution:—Held: she did not thereby except property subsequently purchased with savings out of her separate estate, which was conveyed to uses similar to those contained in the settlement. Semble: a purchase with savings out of separate estate is not affected by a covenant to settle after-acquired property.—HUGHES v. JONES (1863), 1 Hem. & M. 765; 2 New Rep. 417; 32 L. 725. ——.]—Co-owners of lands, partly customary freehold & partly leasehold, worked a quarry on part of them & let the rest to agricultural tenants. Part of the undivided profits were from time to time laid out in purchases of other lands for purposes of the quarry, the lands so purchased being, in most cases, conveyed to trustees on trust for the persons expressly by name who were interested in the undivided profits constituting the purchase moneys, their heirs & assigns, & being in other cases conveyed to trustees without any express declaration of trust. One of the co-owners, a woman, married, & on her marriage a settlement of her shares & interest in the lands & quarry, plant & machinery, was executed, by which her shares & interest in the customary freeholds were treated as real estate, & her shares & interest in the entire property, both real & personal were settled on herself for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, with remainder to her husband for life, with remainder, in default of issue, in trust for her, her heirs, exors., administrators & assigns. Further purchase of customary freehold land were, after her marriage, made from time to time, out of the undivided profits of the quarry, the land so purchased being conveyed to trustees, but without any trusts being declared, except in one instance, that of a purchase made in 1849, in which case trusts were expressed on the instrument of conveyance, & were for the benefit of the co-owners, by name, in undivided shares, their heirs & assigns. In the books of account kept by the manager of the business these purchases were treated as if they had been purchases of stock-in-trade. These accounts were from time to time submitted to the parties interested, &, in particular, to the husband of the married woman. She having died without issue:—Held: her share in the purchases of land so made after her marriage devolved as real estate, & not as personalty, & having been made with savings of income, were not comprised in the settlement, but passed at once on her death to pltf., her heir-at-law & customary heir.—STEWARD v. BLAKEWAY (1869), 4 Ch. SUB-SECT. 3.—FROM ALLOWANCE BY OR ON BEHALF OF HUSBAND.

A. When Living Together.

730. General rule.]—(1) Money received by a married woman out of the proceeds of her husband's business, or saved by her out of moneys given to her by him for household purposes, dress, or the like, & invested by her in her own name, belongs to her husband. Secus as to moneys saved by her out of the income of her separate estate, & so invested.

(2) Where such investment had been made by her husband for her, upon its being impeached by his creditors after his death:—Held: the onus was upon her to prove that the moneys were the savings of her separate estate.

(3) She proved that they were saved out of rents of furnished houses, which were settled to her separate use:—Held: that threw back upon the creditors the onus of proving that the furniture belonged to the husband, &, also, what part of the rents were to be attributed to the furniture.—BARRACK v. M'CULLOCH (1856), 3 K. & J. 110; 26 L. J. Ch. 105; 28 L. T. O. S. 218; 3 Jur. N. S. 180; 5 W. R. 38; 69 E. R. 1043.

738. ——.]—A husband voluntarily & after marriage allowed the wife for her separate use to make profit of all butter, eggs, pigs, poultry, & fruit beyond what is used in the family; out of which his wife saved £100 which the husband borrowed & died. The ct. allowed this agreement to encourage the wife's frugality: & the wife shall come in a creditor for this £100 especially there being no defect of assets to pay debts.

Testator allowed his first wife to dispose & make a profit of all such butter, eggs, poultry, pigs, fruit & other trivial matters arising from the farm, for her own separate use, calling it her pin money, . . . & he also confessed that . . . wanting some money, he had been obliged to borrow £100 of his wife. . . . It was the strongest proof of the husband's consent that the wife should have a separate property in the money arising by these savings, in that he had applied to her & prevailed with her to lend him this sum (per CUR.).—SLANNING v. STYLE (1734), 3 P. 745. —— —— Wife's right to alienate.] — (1) A sum ordered by the Lords Justices, in exercise of their jurisdiction in Lunacy, to be paid to the wife of a lunatic is an allowance for her maintenance & personal benefit, & they will not order it to be paid to any other person.

(2) Alimony is not property within Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 25. Alimony is not in its nature property, but is a sum ordered by the ct., having regard to the circumstances of the husband & wife, to be paid to the wife for her sole maintenance, & is not alienable. A marred woman obtained a decree for judicial separation from her husband, & the ct. subsequently ordered the husband to pay her permanent alimony after the rate of £60 per annum. The husband became a lunatic, & an order was made in Lunacy that out of the interest of a fund standing to the credit of the lunacy the annual sum of £60 should be paid to the wife in respect of her aforesaid alimony. The wife purported to assign the annuity to her nephew:—Held: she could not alienate it.—Re ROBINSON (1884), 27 Ch. D. 160; 53 L. J. Ch. 986; 51 L. T. 737; 33 W. R. 17, C. A.

752. Effect on husband's interest — Divorce before property in possession.]—By a decree of the Ct. of Divorce a marriage between a husband & wife was declared to be dissolved. At the date of the decree the wife was entitled to a reversionary interest in a sum of stock which was not settled before her marriage, & had been the subject of a post-nuptial settlement. After the decree, the fund fell into possession & the divorced wife took steps to realise the fund, but before it was recovered she died :—Held : the same consequences as to property must follow the declaration of dissolution by the Divorce Ct., as if the marriage contract had been annihilated & the marriage tie broken on that date ; those rights of the divorced husband which depended upon the contract ceased at the same date ; & the exors. of the divorced wife were entitled to the fund.—WILKINSON v. GIBSON (1867), L. 755. —— Settlement induced by husband's misrepresentation.]—By a marriage settlement alleged to have been made in consequence of false representations by the husband, a policy of assurance on the life of the wife's mother was settled on the usual trusts, giving the husband a life interest after the death of the wife. The marriage was dissolved soon after its celebration on the ground of the husband's adultery & desertion. There was no issue. The trustees of the settlement, thence arising during her lifetime as an alimentary allowance, not affectable by the deeds or debts of any future husband she might marry. The marriage having been dissolved by decree of divorce obtained by the wife on account of her husband's adultery :—Held : she was not entitled to aliment until the sums insured should become payable by his death.—STEWART v. STEWART (1872), 10 Macph. having no funds to keep up the policy, assigned it absolutely to the wife, who paid the premiums from the date of such assignment. On the death of the assured the assurance society, after some delay, paid the money due on the policy into ct. on the ground that the wife could not give a discharge:—Held: under the special circumstances, the husband had no claim on the fund; the society was nevertheless justified in paying the money into ct., but it must pay interest from the time when the money became payable till it was paid into ct., though there was then no legal hand to receive it.—Re ROSIER'S TRUSTS (1877), 37 L. SECT. 2.—SEPARATION.

SUB-SECT. 1.—SEPARATION UNDER AGREEMENT.

756. Wife entitled to property acquired during separation.]—By a deed of separation between a husband & wife residing in America, who agreed to live apart, it was agreed that the wife should be at liberty to carry on business, & retain for her own use all her present & future property. Under the will of R. she became entitled to a sum of £3 per cent. Consols, which, by an order of the ct., made after the separation, was carried to the account of the share of the husband & wife. Nothing having been heard of, though inquiries had been made for, the husband during a period of fourteen years, the ct., on a petition presented by the wife, asking for the transfer into her name of the Consols, directed that they should be sold & the proceeds paid to her on her sole receipt.—WHITLOW v. DILWORTH (1854), 2 Sm. & G. 35; 18 Jur. 445; 2 W. R. 150; 65 E. R. 290.

757. ——.]—A. & B. married in 1811; in 1817 they verbally agreed to separate, & not to interfere with each other, & divided their then furniture & effects. They never again cohabited, & the wife supported herself by her own industry, & acquired property, which she disposed of by will in 1856. Probate of this will was opposed by the husband, who asserted his marital right to his wife's property:—Held: under the circumstances, the property had been acquired to the wife's sole & separate use, & the jus disponendi would therefore attach to such property.—HADDON v. FLADGATE (1858), 1 Sw. & Tr. 48; 27 L. 758. Agreement by husband in separation deed—Resigning claims to wife's property.]—A husband, in a deed of separation from his wife, B., covenanted with trustees to assign upon certain trusts for her benefit one-half of all property coming to her or him in her right, & it was agreed that the other half should belong to him absolutely. One of the trustees, by will, gave a share of her property to A., a married lady, for her separate use for life, with a general power of appointment on her decease. She gave another share to B., the wife who was separated from her husband, for her separate use for life, with remainder to her children. By a codicil she revoked the bequest of this last share, & directed B. should have her share the same as A., to be at her own disposal, independent of her children, so that no part of it should be under trust, but to be "entirely at her own disposal, to give to any of her children who may be kind & dutiful to her":—Held: (1) the husband's covenant did not extend to the property so bequeathed to his wife for her separate use, so as to entitle him to have a moiety of it; (2) the wife, B., took an estate for her separate use during her life, & she had a general power of appointment.—KER v. RUXTON (1852), 19 L. T. O. S. 268; 16 Jur. 491.

759. —— ——.]—Where the acknowledgment of a party to a fine was taken before comrs. who were aware of the fact of her being a married woman, & of the non-concurrence of her husband, but the parties were living separate under a deed by which the husband covenanted not to interfere with his wife's property, the ct. refused to reverse the fine, at the instance of the husband, but left him to his common law remedy.—CHEEK v. BOOTLE (1834), 4 Moo. & S. 460.

760. —— —— Grant of administration.]—Qu.: whether a husband who, by a deed of separation, has resigned all claim to the property of his wife is thereby excluded upon her death, in his lifetime, from taking any interest as her representative. In such a case the ct. will not grant administration to the next of kin of the wife unless the husband be cited.—In the Goods of ORANMORE & BROWNE (1861), 30 L. J. P. M. & A. 183; 25 J. P. 504.

761. —— —— ——.]—By a deed of separation it was provided that all the property of which the wife was possessed should be for her separate use, without interference on the part of the husband, in like manner as if he were dead; & that, in case of the wife's death, her property should go to the persons who would have been entitled under Statute of Distributions if she had survived her husband. The wife afterwards died intestate & without issue. The ct. passed over the husband, & granted administration to the father of the intestate, limited to the property covered by the separation deed.—ALLEN v. HUMPHRYS (1882), 8 P. D. 16; 52 L. J. 764. —— By will.]—By a deed of separation made between a husband & a wife & trustees, & duly acknowledged by the wife, it was agreed that the wife should hold all the real & personal estate of the husband & wife, or either of them in right of the wife, as her separate property, & should have power, by will, to devise or bequeath same. The husband then purported to convey to a trustee all such real & personal estate, to be held upon corresponding trusts:—Held: though the wife did not expressly convey real estate vested in her, it was the intention of the deed that she should have power to dispose thereof as if she was unmarried, & accordingly that a certain estate of which a trustee was seized in trust for her separate use during her life, with remainder to herself in fee, passed by her will. A married woman may pass her separate real estate by deed or will as a feme sole.—PRIDE v. BUBB (1871), 7 Ch. App. 64; 41 L. J. Ch. 105; 25 L. T. 890; 20 W. R. 220, L. C.

765. Wife entitled to property acquired during separation.]—A husband deserted his wife immediately after her marriage in 1846, & she was supported by her sister. In 1848 an annuity was bequeathed to her for her life, which the trustee accumulated until 1862, when the wife obtained a decree for a judicial separation. 789. Resumption of cohabitation.]—A married woman was entitled in reversion to two funds, subject to life interests. On Apr. 21, 1882, the tenant for life of one of the funds died, but no steps were taken by the husband to reduce the fund into possession. On June 13, 1882, the wife obtained a protection order under Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878 (c. 19), s. 4, but on July 21, 1882, she resumed cohabitation with her husband. Prior to Apr. 24, 1882, the funds had been mortgaged by the husband, but the deeds were not acknowledged by the wife, although she was made a party thereto. On July 26, 1882, the tenant for life of the other fund also died. On Sept. 20, 1882, the husband & wife mortgaged both funds by a deed duly acknowledged by the wife. The trustees of the funds paid them into ct., & the mtgees. under the last-mentioned mtge., together with the wife, petitioned for the payment out to them of the funds. This application was opposed by the prior mtgees.:—Held: (1) both funds became the property of the wife during the separation as if she were a feme sole, the effect of the resumption of cohabitation being expressly provided for by Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 25 (2), as the funds belonged to the wife as against her husband they must equally belong to her as against his assigns; & petitioners were accordingly entitled to payment out.—Re EMERY'S TRUSTS (1884), 50 L. T. 197; 32 W. R. 357.

790. Property restrained from anticipation.]—A married woman, who was entitled to an equitable life interest in the rents of certain premises for her separate use without power of anticipation, was deserted by her husband & obtained a protection order under Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 21. She afterwards executed a mtge. of her life interest covenanting to pay the mtge. debt. Judgment was obtained against her as a feme sole in an action on the covenant:—Held: her life interest having devolved upon her before the desertion, the restraint on anticipation still attached, & consequently a receiver of her life interest could not be appointed by way of equitable execution on the judgment.

The question to be determined in this case involves the point as to whether deft., being a married woman, could validly mortgage her interest in property vested in trustees & settled to her separate use without power of anticipation. . . . It is quite clear that unless the statute [Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857] can be brought into play, she could not do so (A. L. SMITH, L.J.).—HILL v. COOPER, [1893] 2 Q. B. 85; 62 L. J. Q. Part VI.—Disposition of Property.

SECT. 1.—RESTRAINT ON ANTICIPATION OR ALIENATION.

SUB-SECT. 1.—NATURE OF DOCTRINE.

793. Doctrine of equity—To protect property of married woman.]—If property be given or settled to the separate use of a woman unmarried when the settlement or gift takes effect & she be prohibited against anticipating it, it will, if not alienated by her when discovert, be enjoyed by her as her separate estate, during any coverture or covertures to which she may afterwards be subject; & she will, during the existence of such coverture or covertures, be unable to anticipate it.

There is no principle upon which it can be held that the separate estate operates during a coverture subsequent to the gift, but that the provision against anticipation, with which the gift was qualified, does not (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).

The separate estate & the prohibition of anticipation are equally creatures of equity, & equally inconsistent with the ordinary rules of property. The one is only a restriction & qualification of the other. The two must stand or fall together (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).

When once it was established that the separate estate of a married woman was to be so enjoyed

795. —— ——.]—That [restraint on anticipation] was purely an equity doctrine, the invention of the Chancellors, & is, as I have said, an exception to the general law which says that property shall not be inalienable. That exception was justified on the ground that it was the only way, or at least the best way, of giving property to a married woman. It was considered that to give it her without such a restraint would be, practically, to give it to her husband, & therefore, to prevent this, a condition was allowed to be imposed restraining her from anticipating her income & thus fettering the free alienation of her property (JESSEL, M.R.).—Re RIDLEY, BUCKTON v. HAY (1879), 11 Ch. 796. Power to commit waste — Whether consistent with restraint.] — Testator devised his residuary real estate to his trustees in trust for his granddaughter P. in fee at twenty-one or marriage, & directed that if she should marry under twenty-one his trustees should settle the real estate on her for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with remainder to her children as tenants in common in tail; & he authorised his trustees to give a life estate to his granddaughter's husband, to commence after her decease, & to be either with or without impeachment of waste:—Held: the life estate given to the granddaughter must not be without impeachment of waste; such an estate being inconsistent with the restraint on anticipation.

It appeared to me difficult to conceive how a power to commit waste can exist consistently with a restraint on anticipation (JAMES, L.J.).—CLIVE v. CLIVE (1872), 7 Ch. App. 433; 41 L. J. Ch. 386; 26 L. T. 409; 20 W. R. 477, L. JJ.

799. "Anticipation" & "alienation" equivalent terms.]—It was argued that where a fund given absolutely to a married woman is not an income-bearing fund, the ct. will order it to be paid to her, notwithstanding that she is restrained from anticipation, but that it is otherwise where the fund produces income or where the restriction is expressed to be not merely of anticipation, but of alienation. On principle I can see no reason for this distinction. A clause restraining anticipation is construed as meaning that the married woman shall not assign her interest; whether the words are without any power of "alienation" or of "anticipation," the effect is the same (KAY, J.).

In Re Croughton's Trusts, No. 811, post, the restraint was "so that she shall not have power to deprive herself of the benefit thereof by sale, mtge., charge or otherwise in the way of anticipation," which is a very common form of the restriction & shows that the word "anticipation" includes a sale, mtge. or charge (KAY, J.).—Re BOWN, O'HALLORAN v. KING (1883), 27 Ch. (2) Such restraint is not invalidated by the life estate being given without impeachment of waste.

A lease was granted by her of this house to E., in trust for the husband, for thirty-one years, at a very low rent, payable to the husband & wife, & the survivor of them, & the heirs & assigns of the wife; & E. did not enter into any covenants:—Held: this lease was invalid, as being an incumbrance on the property.

(3) A freehold estate was devised to a married woman in fee, followed by a declaration "that she should not sell, mortgage, charge or incumber the estate, & that she should have, receive, & take such estate for her own sole & separate use, benefit, & disposal, & have the management thereof independent of her husband, & the same should not be liable to his debts, control, or intermeddlings":—Held: the estate was effectually settled on her, in fee, for her separate use, but without power to sell, mortgage, charge, or incumber it, during the coverture.—BAGGETT v. MEUX (1846), 1 Ph. 627; 15 L. 815. —— Governed by intention of donor to restrain.]—Where a testator makes a bequest to a married woman for her separate use absolutely, & follows it by a clause restraining her from anticipation, the question whether the restraint on anticipation is effectual does not depend on the question whether it is a gift of an income-bearing fund or of a sum of cash, but whether testator has or has not shown an intention that the trustees should keep the investment & pay the incomes to the married woman.

Testatrix directed her trustees to raise & invest a sum of £4,500, & to pay the income to B. during her life, & after her death to hold two shares in trust for two of her nieces for life, & then for their children, & as to one other share to pay it to the daughters of a deceased niece, & as to the remaining share to pay it to H., a married woman, for her separate use without power to anticipate the same, & her receipt alone to be a sufficient discharge :—Held : on the construction of the will, on the death of B., H. was entitled to receive the capital of her share, notwithstanding the restraint on anticipation.

The point in dispute has never been brought in this distinct form before the Ct. of Appeal. . . . In my opinion the effect of the restraint on anticipation must in all these cases depend upon the intention of testator as expressed in the will (BAGGALLAY, L.J.).

Some importunate expressions have been used by judges making this distinction, that where there is a gift of an income-bearing fund the restraint on anticipation is effectual, but that it is not effectual if it is a gift of a sum of cash. That distinction is erroneous. The question depends on the intention of testator declared in his will. Has he declared an intention that the money should be paid to her, or that the income should be paid to her from time to time? It is not enough that it should be an income-bearing fund, but the intention of the testator must be shown that the married woman is to have the enjoyment of it in the way of income. . . . That is the true rule which does not turn on the accident as to how the money is invested at the death of testator or at any other time. If testator shows that the married woman is to enjoy the gift not as a mere money fund, but as an annuity, that is a strong intimation of his intention that he means the restraint on anticipation to apply not only to the income but also to the capital. In the present case, therefore, it is not material whether the gift was of a sum of cash or of a share of an invested fund, because . . . there is no indication of an intention that the trustees should retain the investments in their hands & let her enjoy the income, but they are to pay the fund to her for her sole & separate use, & her receipt is to be a sufficient discharge. In this will, having regard to the fact that it is a reversionary gift, the words restraining anticipation may have full effect given to them by preventing the lady from charging the fund before it falls into possession (COTTON, L.J.).—Re BOWN, O'HALLORAN v. KING (1881), 27 Ch. A. In General.

816. General rule — Question of intention of donor—Formal words unnecessary.]—No particular form of words is necessary to impose a restraint on anticipation in a limitation to the separate use of a married woman, the question being one of intention.

Property was devised in trust for testator's daughter & her assigns for her life, & to permit her to receive the income for her life for her separate use, with a direction that her receipts alone, or of some person or persons authorised by her to

A subsequent part of the will contained a bequest of a sum of stock to trustees, in trust to pay the income to another daughter for her life "for her own sole & separate & inalienable use & benefit, & without power of anticipation." H. was a married woman:—Held: the words of the devise, even if they had stood alone, would have been insufficient to operate as a restraint on anticipation; the cases as to precatory trusts did not apply, as there was no trust imposed in favour of some other person; & the subsequent bequest strengthened this construction by showing that testator, when he intended to impose a restraint on anticipation, knew of & used the appropriate words for so fettering the estate.—Re HUTCHINGS TO BURT (1888), 59 L. T. 490, C. A.

833. Words ineffective to restrain alienation.]—Where a married woman is entitled to property for her separate use without power of anticipation, the restraint on anticipation does not apply to income accrued due; & a judgment creditor may enforce the judgment against income which has accrued due at or before the date of the judgment.

In early days, when the effect of placing a married woman in the position of a feme sole with regard to her separate property came to be understood, there was an inclination to treat separate income as a purely personal provision intended for maintenance. Arguments more or less plausible were founded on the various expressions employed in the copious style of conveyancing to limit or develop "separate use." Where the direction was that the income was to be paid "from time to time," it was argued that the prescribed mode of payment was inconsistent with an absolute power of disposition. But the authorities the other way were too strong, & that attempt failed. The usual direction, that the income was to be paid "into the proper hands" of the married woman, & that "her receipts alone were to be a good discharge," was not more efficacious. The ct. always said that a married woman might dispose of her separate estate, "& her assignee," to use Lord Eldon's words "would take it; as if there was a contract entitling the assignee, this ct. would compel her to give her own receipt, if that was necessary to enable him to receive it." Nor did words requiring payment to be made on "personal appearance & receipt" carry the matter any further, for no payment, as Lord Cranworth observed, could be made into her proper hands without her personal appearance. In fact, these & such like expressions, however stringent they appear at first sight, were regarded as "only an unfolding of all that is implied in a gift to the separate use" (LORD MACNAGHTEN). —HOOD BARRS v. HERIOT, [1896] A. 834. Right to disclaim.]—Since the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), a married woman is entitled to disclaim a gift by her will or other disposition of personal property, notwithstanding that the property so given is subject to a restraint on anticipation.

Testatrix gave an annuity to a married woman, during her life for a separate use, without power of anticipation. The annuity was to commence from the death of testatrix & to be paid quarterly, & testatrix directed defts., whom she appointed exors. & trustees of her will, to set apart a fund for securing the annuity & testatrix gave the residue of her estate to tenants in common. Testatrix died in Feb. 1913. In May, 1913, defts. ascertained that it would be difficult to set aside a fund to answer the annuity without selling leasehold property which the residuary legatees were desirous of retaining. As the result of negotiations between the married woman & the residuary legatees, she agreed to disclaim the annuity in consideration of a lump sum to be paid her by them. B. Form of Receipt Clause.

835. Addition of negative words—Necessity for.]—Construction of a clause framed to restrain anticipation by a married woman of property settled to her separate use. It is not in all cases necessary that negative words should be introduced in the receipt clause, to complete the restraint on anticipation, for that clause must be construed to relate to the income, subject to such restraints as are imposed by the former part of the settlement.

By the settlement made on the marriage of Mr. & Mrs. V., part of the lady's property was vested in trustees, upon trust to pay the income thereof into the proper hands of Mrs. V., or to her appointees, by any note or writing under her hand at any time during her life, but not so as, during the joint lives of herself & Mr. V., to dispose thereof or deprive herself of the benefit thereof by mtge., charge, sale, assignment or otherwise in the way of anticipation, to the intent that the same might be for the sole & separate use of Mrs. V. & not subject to the debts, control, disposition or engagements of Mr. V., or any other person with whom she might, after his decease, happen to intermarry, & it was thereby agreed & declared, that the receipt or receipts of Mrs. V. or of her appointees, should be sufficient discharges to the trustees :—Held : the first part of the above clause amounted to a restraint against anticipation by Mrs. V. of the income settled to her separate use, & the effect of the first part of the clause was not destroyed by the absence of negative words in the second part of the clause, relating to the power of giving receipts.—HARROP v. HOWARD (1845), 3 Hare, 624 ; 14 L. 837. —— Sufficiency.]—Where a married woman is entitled to a life interest to her separate use, under her marriage settlement, her receipt alone to be a sufficient discharge, that is not a restraint upon anticipation ; but where the trustees, upon the clause, as to the separate receipt, consider it so far doubtful that they refuse to pay either to the married woman or her assignee, & a bill is filed, they are still entitled to their costs in priority.—ROSE v. SHARROD (1863), as reported in 11 W. R. 356.

838. Payment of income to wife—Receipts from time to time sufficient discharge—Effect to create separate estate.]—Power of disposition of a feme covert over estate settled to her separate use. A sale by the husband & wife by fine was under all the circumstances established as to the separate estate of the wife & her reversion in fee ; though to the trustee for her separate use, & to support the contingent remainders : but set aside as to the remainders, to such persons, & uses, etc., as she should appoint by will, &, in default of appointment, to her children, upon her bill ; & two wills, obtained from her, decreed to be delivered up.

The trustees were to receive all the dividends & from time to time to pay them into the proper hands of the wife, receipts to be given from time to time. . . . These words have no more effect than to create in the view of the ct. a separate interest of the wife in the property (LORD ELDON, C.).—PARKES v. WHITE (1805), 11 Ves. 209 ; 32 E. R. 1068, L. C.

845. —— —— —— ——.]—By a settlement, dated in 1861, freehold property was conveyed to trustees upon trust to let the same, & pay the rents & annual proceeds to W., a married woman, during her life, for her own sole & separate use, free from the debts, control or engagements of her present or any future husband; "the receipts of her . . . for the said rents & annual proceeds to be given after the same shall have become due" to be "good & effectual discharges" to the trustees for the same; & from & after the decease of W. then upon trust to pay the rents & annual proceeds to her husband, in case he survived her, during his life; with ultimate trusts for sale & division amongst the children & issue of W. by her then present or any future husband, as should be living at the time of such division. In 1881 W. & her husband mortgaged the income of the settled property to secure a loan of £1,000, & in 1883 they further charged such income, together with other property, with the payment of £500. Notices of the mtge. & further charge were duly given to the trustees of the settlement. W. did not receive any of the money secured thereby, but her husband received the same, & applied the whole in payment of his own debts. The question was whether the mtge. was a valid charge upon the income of the settled property, & who was entitled to be paid such income:—Held: W. was restrained from anticipation, & her receipt was the only discharge which the trustees could accept.—Re SMITH, CHAPMAN v. WOOD (1884), 51 L. separate use, with a direction that her or her appointees' receipts, notwithstanding coverture, should be good discharges, & after her death in trust for her children :—Held : upon the particular terms of the gift, the restraint on anticipation applied to an assignment, by the married woman, of her separate estate as well as to an appointment in execution of her power, notwithstanding the will did not provide that her receipts alone should be good discharges.

(2) The form commonly used by conveyancers for limiting property to the separate use of a married woman, with the clause against anticipation of the income, is sufficient, as it plainly indicates the intention to prevent the married woman from charging the property & anticipating her income, without the insertion of express negative words.

(3) The intention of the settlor to give a married woman a life interest in the property without the power of anticipating the income, operates & controls the whole clause.—BROWN v. BAMFORD (1846), 1 Ph. 620 ; 15 L. 861. —— ——.]—Testator having a general power of appointment over a settled fund, appointed that a sum of £1,500 should be raised & paid to his daughter, who was a married woman, absolutely for her separate use, without power of anticipation ; & appointed that one-fourth of the residue of the fund should be held upon trust for the same daughter absolutely for her separate use without power of anticipation :—Held : the daughter was not entitled to payment of the capital of one-fourth of the residue.

Testator first directs that a sum of £1,500 shall be raised & paid to the same daughter, absolutely for her separate use. That gift is followed by words restraining her from anticipation, but still there is testator's direction that it shall be paid to her & she is entitled to receive the capital. Then testator appoints one-fourth of the residue of the settled fund for the benefit of his daughter, using quite different words. . . . Testator in effect directs that the share of the residue is to be retained by the trustees for the benefit of the lady. Therefore she is precluded from disposing of the capital by the restraint on anticipation. For it has been decided that a clause restraining anticipation may apply to a gift of capital as well as to a gift of income as in Baggett v. Meux, No. 805, ante (COTTON, L.J.).

The effect of the clause restraining anticipation must depend on the intention of the testator as declared in his will (LOPES, J.).—Re GREY'S SETTLEMENTS, ACASON v. GREENWOOD (1887), 34 Ch. D. 712 ; 56 L. J. Ch. 511 ; 56 L. T. 350 ; 35 W. R. 560, C. A.

B. Effect of Remarriage.

888. Restraint revival — Subject to disposition during discoverture.]—Where property is given to the separate use of a woman, without power of anticipation, she will have the absolute property in the fund before marriage, or upon becoming discovert, by the death of her husband ; but if she does not alienate the property, in that case, upon her subsequent marriage, the separate use clause, & the prohibition against alienation, will both become operative.

Testator bequeathed certain property to trustees, upon trust to pay an annuity of £50 to S. for her life, for her separate use, without anticipation. S. was a single woman at the death of testator, but married some years afterwards, & on the death of her first husband, contracted a second marriage. S. & her second husband contracted to sell the annuity, & presented a petition that it might be ordered to be paid to the proposed purchaser :—Held : the limitation in the will to her separate use, & also the restraint upon alienation, were both operative on her marriage ; & the contract for was limited to the sole & separate use of K. in case she should survive M., her intended husband, with a restraint on anticipation :—Held : such limitation referred as well to the then intended marriage as to every future coverture, so as to prevent K. from incumbering or otherwise dealing with the jointure during the life of M.—Re MOLYNEUX'S ESTATE (1872), 6 I. The husband died, & the lady married a second time:—Held: as the trust for the lady's separate use without power of anticipation was for her life, the restraint against anticipation revived on her second marriage.—HAWKES v. HUBBACK (1870), L. Pltf. obtained judgment against deft. as a married woman, & then obtained an order appointing a receiver of her interest under the settlement:—Held: the restraint on anticipation became operative upon the second marriage, & therefore an order for a receiver ought not to have been made.—STROUD v. EDWARDS (1897), 77 L. 899. Extent of protection—General rule.]—What is the force & effect of this restraint on anticipation? It provides that nothing done, or omitted to be done, by W. [the married woman] at any given time shall deprive her of the right to receive from the trustees the next & every succeeding payment of the income of the fund as it becomes due. A provision for a married woman who is restrained from anticipation is regarded as giving the highest security known to the law that the married woman shall, come what may to herself & her husband, have from half-year to half-year, some moneys paid into her very hands to increase her comforts or to supply her with maintenance. This security would be seriously imperilled if, by the doctrine of election, she could take in lieu of this inalienable provision a sum of money or other benefit which she might forthwith make over to her husband, or squander at her choice (FRY, L.J.).—Re VARDON'S TRUSTS (1885), Ch. 906. —— Statutory charge on property—Enemy alien—Treaty of Peace Order, 1919, s. 1, (16).]—Where property settled upon a married woman for her separate use is subject to a restraint on anticipation, the restraint is not a mere personal liability attaching to the married woman, but is a condition of the trust under which she takes her interest, & as such it cannot, any more than any other condition of the trust, be destroyed, except by the express words of some statutory enactment or by necessary implication, &, except in such case, any charge upon that interest must be subject to the restriction under which she takes the interest.

The Treaty of Peace signed at Versailles on June 28, 1919, came into force on Jan. 10, 1920. By the above sub-sect., which has effect as a statutory enactment, it is provided that "all property, rights & interests" within His Majesty's Dominions or Protectorates belonging to German nationals at the date when the Treaty came into force, with an immaterial exception, & the net proceeds of their sale, liquidation or other dealings therewith are thereby charged with the payments therein mentioned. On Jan. 10, 1920, applt., a German national, was entitled under her marriage settlement to a reversionary life interest in certain funds in England which were settled upon her for her separate use without power of anticipation. She was then & still was under coverture :—Held : although the Order created a charge upon her interest under the settlement it created it only upon the interest as it then existed—namely, subject to the restraint on anticipation—& there was therefore no effective charge which operated to deprive her of the instalments of income when they became due.—Re RUSH, WARRE v. RUSH, [1923] 1 Ch. 56 ; 92 L. 916. —— Though fraud on assignee—Restraint disclosed.]—There is no equity to apply income which a married woman is restrained from anticipating, to make good the consequences of her fraud, where the restraint on anticipation appears from the instrument in respect of which relief is sought. A married woman who had previously to her marriage settled certain property upon trust for herself during the joint lives of herself & her husband for her separate use, without power of anticipation, & after the death of one of them, for the survivor for life, & after trusts for the benefit of the children of the marriage, upon such trusts as she should by deed or will appoint, &, there being no children of the marriage, had by deed irrevocably appointed her reversionary interest in favour of her mother, subsequently, &, as she alleged, under the compulsion of her husband, made another absolute irrevocable appointment of her reversionary interest in favour of her husband without noticing the previous appointment. The husband deposited the appointment in his favour to secure a debt to himself:—Held: on bill filed by the assignee of the debt & security, that assuming the second appointment to be fraud on the part of the wife, inasmuch as it was not based upon any active misrepresentation by her, but disclosed the restraint on anticipation, & only attempted to deal with the reversionary interest, the assignee of the security was not entitled to impound the income during her life to make good his loss by such fraud.—ARNOLD v. WOODHAMS (1873), L. 918. —— Assignor not estopped from denial of validity.]—A married woman was entitled to the income of property during her life, for her separate use without power of anticipation, subject to a proviso that on a specified event her interest should cease, & the property be held in trust for her husband. In order to assist her husband to make an arrangement with a creditor, she executed a deed-poll, whereby she admitted, believing then that it was true, though, as she afterwards alleged, it was not in fact true, that the event mentioned in the proviso had occurred, & that her life interest had determined, & she released that interest in favour of her husband. On the faith of this deed the creditor entered into arrangements with the husband for his benefit. The wife subsequently, notwithstanding the deed, claimed to receive the income of the property during her life:—Held: she could not by admission or estoppel or in any other way by her own act get rid of the protection afforded by the restraint on anticipation, & her right to receive the income was unaffected by her admission contained in the deed-poll.

A married woman cannot even by her own fraud deprive herself of this protection (LINDLEY, M.R.).—BATEMAN (LADY) v. FABER, [1898] 1 Ch. 144; 67 L. J. Ch. 130; 77 L. T. 576; 46 W. R. 215; 14 T. L. R. 81; 42 Sol. Jo. 80, C. A.

921. Charge on income—To secure loans—Income accrued at date of charge.]—On the marriage of M. with E., funds were settled upon trust, during their joint lives, to pay the income unto such persons as E., notwithstanding her coverture, should, by any writing under her hand, excepting by any mode of anticipation, appoint: &, in default of appointment, unto her sole, separate, & peculiar use, independently of her husband; & so that her receipts, notwithstanding the coverture, or the receipts of the appointee might be good discharges. The trustees of the settlement having improperly invested the trust-fund, a suit was instituted against them for its restitution. Considerable arrears of the income arising from the fund accrued; & E., to secure re-payment of moneys advanced to her by A., mortgaged to him "all those the dividends, interest, & annual produce, or moneys equivalent to interest, dividends, & annual produce, then due & owing, or which thereafter might be decreed to be then due & owing, or which, on the further hearing of the cause on further directions, might be decreed or ordered to be paid to E. for her separate use, under & by virtue of the settlement." On a petition presented by A. to have the money due to him on the mtge., together with the costs of the petition repaid to him out of the arrears of income due to E.:—Held: (1) E. could not appoint the income by way of anticipation; (2) the mortgage by her to A. only affected the arrears of income due at its date.

922. —— ——.]—A married woman, S., was entitled to a gross sum, payable on the death of her father, for her separate use, subject to a restraint on anticipation. During her father's life she promised by letters to repay to D. out of the fund, when it fell in, advances made by him to her & her husband. After the death of her father the fund was paid into ct., & S., being still under coverture, verbally promised D. that he should be paid out of the fund if he would offer no opposition to her application for payment out of ct.; & it was accordingly paid to her:—Held: D. had no charge on the fund, the letters being ineffectual by reason of the restraint on anticipation, & the subsequent parol promise being void for want of consideration & under Stat. Frauds.—Re SYKES' TRUSTS (1862), as reported in 2 John. & H. 415; 70 E. R. 1120.

923. —— To secure annuity.]—A married woman having personal property under a will for life & absolutely, a settlement is made of it to her separate use without power of anticipation, with a power of appointment by deed. Without adverting to the clause against anticipation, & in alleged ignorance of its existence, she & her husband grant an annuity in consideration of £215, & an order is made for payment of the dividends of her separate property to the grantee to secure the annuity, & he receives the dividends & hands over the surplus from time to time. The clause against anticipation is then discovered, & the wife petitions for discharge of the order for payment of the dividends to the grantee of the annuity, for restitution of the money received, & for costs against the grantee & his solr.:—Held: the order must be discharged, & the restitution not being pressed for, no order made upon that part of the petition, but costs given against the grantee, his solr., & her husband.—FORTY v. REAY (1855), 3 W. 925. Mortgage of whole interest—Mortgagee with notice of restraint.]—(1) A real estate may be devised to a married woman in fee simple for her separate use, yet in such a manner as to disable her during the coverture from making any sale, mtge., charge or incumbrance to take effect against it during her life or during her coverture. Hence where A. devised a real estate to his daughter B., a married woman, in fee, but with a declaration that she should not sell, charge, mtge. or incumber it, followed by another declaration that she should take it for her own sole & separate use & benefit & disposal, & have the sole management thereof, independent of her husband & free from his debts, etc.:—Held: the prohibitory clause was not void, inasmuch as it must be taken in connection as well with the succeeding as the preceding words; & therefore a security, by way of equitable mtge., executed by the husband & wife to a party who had notice of the wife's title under the will, was void as against the wife.

(2) Feme covert is entitled under a will to an estate in fee simple, subject to an outstanding lease for thirty-one years from June, 1816, at a rent of £60 per annum, & subject to a clause in the will prohibiting her from mortgaging or incumbering the property during coverture. In June, 1840, the husband took an assignment to himself of the lease of 1816, & the husband & wife executed a new lease to E., as a trustee for the husband, for the term of thirty-one years, at the same rent as before. In this lease no notice was taken of the wife's separate estate, & E. entered into no covenants. In 1841 the property was let at £90 per annum:—Held: the new lease was an incumbrance within the meaning of the prohibitory clause contained in the will.—BAGGETT v. MEUX (1844), 1 Coll. 138; 13 L. At the time of testator's death the sister was married. The husband was still living. The sister executed a deed assigning her life interest by way of mtge.:—Held: "anticipating" could not be read as meaning "attempting to anticipate," &, as, by reason of the restraint on anticipation during coverture, the assignment of the life interest was wholly inoperative, there had been no forfeiture.—Re WORMALD, FRANK v. MUZEEN (1890), 43 Ch. The daughter while still under coverture executed an assignment of her annuity by way of mtge.:—Held: the daughter being precluded by reason of her coverture & the restraint upon anticipation from making an effectual assignment, the assignment was invalid apart from the forfeiture clause in the will, & therefore no forfeiture was effected thereby.—Re ADAMSON, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. BILLING (1913), 109 L. Pledge of goods on loan—Liability to refund loan—Before possession recovered.]—In 1859, A., by deed of settlement, devised certain plate to trustees for the sole & separate use of his wife B. for life, but she was not to alien or dispose of it. In 1872 the plate was deposited by A. with C. as security for the loan of a sum of money advanced by C., the deposit being made with the knowledge & consent of B. Since 1874 repeated demands were made by A., B., & the trustees for possession of the plate:—Held: (1) inasmuch as B. had parted with the possession of the plate, & had the benefit herself, & it was received bonâ fide, she could recover possession without repaying the advance; (2) the right to sue of A., or the trustees, or B.'s exors. after her death, was unaffected.—VAUGHAN v. WILKINSON (1885), 1 T. 933. Mortgage while widow—Restraint revived on remarriage—Subsequent mortgage to third party—Marshalling.]—A., a widow, who was entitled for her life to the income of a fund in ct., mortgaged her life interest to B., & afterwards married again, upon which event a restraint on anticipation as to part of the income revived. A. subsequently charged her life interest, so far as she could bind the same, in favour of C. The interest on B.'s mtge. was alone sufficient to absorb almost the whole of that part of the income which alone was available for payment of the interest on C.'s charge:—Held: the securities must be marshalled, & B.'s interest must be paid out of that part of the income which was not available for the payment of the interest on C.'s charge.—Re LODER'S TRUSTS (1886), 56 L. 936. Appointment under maintenance clause—Maintenance of children beyond minority—Life interest affected.]—By an ante-nuptial settlement a fund was declared to be held by the trustees upon trust for the intended wife for life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation, & after her death in trust for the intended husband for life, & after the decease of the survivor, in trust for the children of the marriage as the intended husband & wife should jointly appoint, &, subject thereto & to a separate power of appointment in the survivor, in trust for the children equally to be vested in sons at twenty-one & in daughters at twenty-one or marriage. There was also a power for the trustees, at the request of the husband & wife, during their joint lives, to advance, for the benefit of any child whose portion should not be vested, any part of his or her presumptive portion, & to apply for or towards the maintenance or education of any such child or children all or any part of the income of such his, her, or their presumptive portions. The only children of the marriage were two sons & a daughter. The husband & wife appointed the trust fund to the three children equally, to be vested in sons at twenty-one & in the daughter at twenty-one or marriage, with trusts for accruer in the event of any child dying before attaining a vested interest. By the same deed the husband & wife requested the trustees to pay for five years after the date of the deed certain sums for the maintenance of the three children, & after the expiration of that period, to pay £150 towards the maintenance & education of the children during the residue of the life of the wife:—Held: the maintenance clause did not enable the wife to affect her life interest by such a prospective provision, at all events as regarded any period beyond the minority of the sons, or the minority or marriage of the daughter.—

J. married, & a settlement was made on her marriage, in which was contained a covenant by the husband to settle future acquired property of the wife. Testatrix afterwards died, & her exors. paid J.'s share into ct. J. then petitioned by a next friend to have it paid to her on her separate receipt :—Held : the true construction of the direction in the will was that during coverture, the share of J. was not alienable by her ; such share was not therefore included in the covenant, & the fund must be retained in ct. & the dividends only paid to J. during her coverture.—Re SAREL (1864), 4 New Rep. 321 ; 10 L. 940. ——.]—An agreement by husband & wife, in an ante-nuptial settlement for the settlement by the husband & wife of the wife's after-acquired property, is a covenant by the wife as well as by the husband, whether the wife is a minor or of full age. If the wife is a minor, & the covenant is for her benefit, it is voidable only & not void, & is binding upon all property coming to her during the coverture for her separate use, without a restraint on anticipation, until she avoids or disaffirms the covenant as to such property ; for she may, after attaining twenty-one, & during the coverture, elect whether the covenant shall be binding on her separate estate or not, such right of election being a necessary consequence of a married woman's power to dispose of, without her husband's consent, property settled to her separate use ; but, inasmuch as a contract by a married woman, while under coverture, affecting her separate property binds only her then existing separate property, & not separate property which she may thereafter acquire, the wife in electing to confirm the covenant, thereby binds only that separate property to which she is entitled at the date of the confirmation, & not that to which she may subsequently become entitled during the coverture. Semble : the doctrine of election or compensation does not apply in the case of a married woman entitled for her separate use with a restraint on anticipation.—SMITH v. LUCAS (1881), 18 Ch. 941. ——.]—A restraint on anticipation is equivalent to a restraint on alienation, & accordingly the shares of married women in residuary real & personal estate given to them by will for their separate use without power of anticipation, are not bound by covenants for settlement of after-acquired property contained in their respective marriage settlements ; & the capital of the personal estate is not payable to them on their separate receipt.

It [the conveyance pursuant to the covenants] will result in conferring interests on other persons by an act inter vivos when testator has declared by a clause which the law holds to be valid that the ladies shall not anticipate which I understand to be the same thing as that they shall not alienate (CHITTY, J.).—Re CURREY, GIBSON v. WAY (1886), 32 Ch. 945. Not affected by restraint—Restraint affecting income only—Entail barred.]—By marriage settlement personal property was assigned to trustees upon trust to pay the income to the wife for her separate use for life without power of anticipation, & after her decease, in case her husband should survive, to pay so much of the income as she should by deed or will appoint for his wife, & subject thereto for the children of the marriage; & in case there should be no children, then upon trust in case the wife should survive her husband, for her, her exors., administrators & assigns, for her sole & separate use; but if she should not survive her husband, then for such of her relations as she should, notwithstanding coverture, by deed or will appoint.

The wife made a will in exercise of the power during coverture, & survived her husband without having had issue of the marriage:—Held: upon demurrer, the will, made during coverture, & not republished after her husband's death, was a good disposition of all the property.—BISHOP v. WALL (1876), 3 Ch. 946. ——.]—A married woman, under the limitations of a will made in 1846, was equitable tenant in tail to her separate use of certain freehold estates. By a clause in the same will she was also restrained from alienation of the rents & profits. Her husband became bkpt., & after his order of discharge joined with his wife in barring the equitable entail & limiting the estate in fee to the separate use of the wife. The wife died, having by her will devised the estate for the benefit of her children, & the husband's assignees claimed the husband's estate by curtesy:—Held: the restraint on anticipation did not prevent the wife from barring the entail & acquiring the equitable fee; & the wife, having thereby acquired an equitable fee to her separate use, had power to defeat her husband's right to curtesy by devising the estate.—COOPER v. MACDONALD (1877), 7 Ch. I am of opinion that that applies only to alienation inter vivos & that she is restrained from anticipation, which could only be during her lifetime, except by deed or writing in manner thereinbefore mentioned. 949. Annuity to married woman—Death before annuity purchased—Bequest by woman to husband.]—Testator, who died in Aug. 1885, bequeathed numerous legacies & annuities including an annuity of £200 to a husband & wife during their joint lives, &, after the decease of either of them, an annuity of £100 to the survivor during his or her life, the wife's annuity to be for her separate use & without power of anticipation. In Nov. 1885, testator's estate was insufficient for payment in full of the legacies & annuities bequeathed by his will, & an administration action was commenced in which judgment for the administration of his estate was obtained on June 23, 1886. Subsequently, beneficiaries who were sui juris having agreed to an abatement pro rata of their legacies & annuities, an order was made in the action that the trustee of the will should purchase in the names of himself & the wife an annuity of £80 on the life of the wife, & also such an annuity on the life of the wife as 225 of the 11,223 parts into which the ultimate residue of testator's estate was directed to be divided, would suffice to purchase. After that order had been passed & entered, but before the annuities had been purchased, the wife died leaving her husband her sole exor. & legatee; & the moneys to be expended on the purchase of the annuities were carried to a separate account. On a petition by the husband for payment out to him of the moneys:—Held: notwithstanding the restraint on anticipation imposed on the wife with respect to her annuity, the husband was entitled to have the moneys paid out to him.—Re ROSS, ASHTON v. ROSS, [1900] 1 Ch. 162; 69 L. 958. Under Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (c. 93), s. 12.]—Above sect. extends to property settled to the separate use of a married woman without power of anticipation. After the passing of above Act, & on the same day on which a marriage took place, but subsequently thereto, judgment was entered up against the wife for a debt incurred previously to the marriage. The judgment creditors subsequently obtained a charging order on the wife's interest in a fund in ct. to the income of which the wife was entitled, for her separate use, without power of anticipation:—Held: the charging order constituted a valid incumbrance on the fund.—SANGER v. SANGER (1871), L. The wife's property having been settled on her marriage for her separate use without power of anticipation, pltfs. commenced an action in the Ch. Div. for the purpose of enforcing the judgment obtained by them against the wife, & further, to be allowed to add to this the costs they had had to pay the husband:—Held: notwithstanding the restraint against anticipation, pltfs. were entitled to recover against the separate estate of the wife the amount of their judgment debt & costs, as well as the costs paid to the husband, which might be added to their original debt.—LONDON & PROVINCIAL BANK v. BOGLE (1878), 7 Ch. Subsequently to the commencement of the action but before the date of the judgment, deft. married, & by an ante-nuptial settlement settled six debentures of £500 each to which she was entitled upon the usual trusts for herself for life for her separate use without power of anticipation & after her death for the benefit of her husband & the issue of the marriage. The debentures so settled were subject to a charge given by deft. to her solr. for his costs. On Feb. 5, 1920, pltf. obtained an order appointing him receiver of any interests deft. might have in the debentures, whether under the settlement or not, but without prejudice to the rights of any prior encumbrancers : —Held : the judgment did not have the effect of merging " the debt contracted by her before marriage " in the judgment debts so as to take it out of the operation of the proviso to sect. 19 of above Act, but pltf. could not split up into different parts his judgment debt which included both interest which had accrued due before & interest which had accrued after the date of the marriage, therefore the case was one in which a receiver ought not to be appointed.—ROTHSCHILD v. FISHER, [1920] 2 K. 966. Discoverture before judgment — Widow engaged in trade—Settlement of property before re-marriage.]—(1) Although it is proper that a marriage settlement which settles property to the separate use of the wife should contain a restraint upon anticipation, & such provision is always to be inserted in settlements made under the direction of the ct., there is nothing to prevent persons competent to deal with their property from omitting such a restraint ; & where it has been omitted, the ct. will not construe the instrument as though the provision had been unintentionally left out, but will leave the parties to their remedy by bill for its rectification.

(2) A widow engaged in trade settled her property, in contemplation of marriage, upon herself for life for her own absolute use & benefit, free from all marital control & liability. After her marriage, & while still an infant, she contracted a debt for which judgment was recovered against her separate estate. After this debt was contracted, & before the woman attained her majority, a post-nuptial settlement of all the property was made in 1884, under Infants' Settlements Act, 1855 (c. 43), to the wife for her life for her sole & separate use with a restraint on anticipation, & after her death to her husband & children. This settlement was approved by the Ch. Div. of the High Ct. The judgment creditor applied to have a receiver appointed of the property, upon the ground that such settlement was void as against creditors under the last clause of the above sect. :—Held: the settlement though made after the debt was contracted, was valid as against creditors by virtue of the first part of the above sect., & the judgment creditor was not entitled to have a receiver appointed.—HEMINGWAY v. BRAITHWAITE (1889), 61 L. She also settled other property to her separate use for life, as to part of such property with, & as to other part without, restraint upon anticipation. She afterwards, in fraud of the settlement, sold the necklace, & appropriated the money to her own use :—Held: the property settled to her separate use, with restraint upon anticipation, was not chargeable with the value of the necklace, but that the property settled without such restraint was so chargeable.—CLIVE v. CAREW (1859), 1 John. & H. 199; 28 L. 986. Liability to execution — Income accrued before sequestration order.]—A husband having obtained a decree nisi for divorce, an order was made for the wife to give up his children to him. This order was not served upon her personally, but it appeared that she knew of the order & kept out of the way to avoid service. The children were not delivered up, & the father could not discover where they were. A further order was thereupon made for a sequestration to issue against the estate of the wife, & directing her mother, sister, & brother-in-law, who were shown to be in communication with her, to attend to be examined as to their knowledge of the whereabouts of the wife & children. The wife was entitled under her marriage settlement to an income for her separate use with a restraint on anticipation :—Held: (1) the sequestration was properly issued without personal service of the previous order; (2) it was no objection to the form of the writ of sequestration that it was in general terms without expressly defining the property of the wife which was subject to sequestration; (3) the sequestration could not during the coverture be enforced against future income, as to which the wife was restrained from anticipation, but that it applied to arrears which were due when the order for sequestration was made.—HYDE v. HYDE (1888), 13 P. 987. —— Income accrued before judgment—But not received in fact.]—A married woman was entitled as tenant for life to the income of real estate, with a restraint on anticipation; & on Sept. 29, 1894, certain rent became due to her. Creditors who had obtained judgment against the married woman on Oct. 1, took out a summons on the following day asking for the appointment of a receiver of the rent by way of equitable execution. The rent had not come to the hands of the married woman, being either in the possession of her trustees, or remaining unpaid by the tenants of the property. On Nov. 1, the summons came before the Div. Ct. who decided that the restraint on anticipation attached to the overdue rent, & therefore refused to appoint a receiver. The judgment creditors appealed :—Held: the judgment creditors were not entitled to equitable execution over rents of property of which the married woman was tenant for life without power of anticipation, even though such rents were due & payable to her before the date of the judgment sought to be enforced.—PILLERS & PERSHOUSE v. EDWARDS (1894), 71 L. T. 788; 11 T. L. R. 92; 39 Sol. Jo. 96; 14 R. 290, C. A.

On Dec. 24, 1913, the grantor under the deed had paid to the trustee the quarterly sum due on the following day:—Held: on the authority of Barnett v. Howard, No. 973, ante, as at the date of the contract the married woman was restrained from anticipating the quarterly sum, it could not be attached to answer the judgment debt.—WOOD v. LEWIS, [1914] 3 K. On a summons taken out for the purpose of determining the validity of these mtges. & whether pltf. had power to make any future mtges. for the purposes declared by the deed poll:—Held: the deed poll operated by way of direction to the trustees, & thus amounted to a complete & effectual transfer of pltf.'s share upon a new & modified trust, & for the purposes & subject to the conditions imposed by the deed poll she had power to deal with her share by way of anticipation during coverture. Semble: apart from its operation by way of direction, the declaration under seal would have been sufficient, as a release, to remove the protection attached to the original trust.—Re CHRIMES, LOCOVICH v. CHRIMES, [1917] 1 Ch. 30; 61 Sol. 1007. Power to annul marriage settlement—By which restraint imposed—After decree nisi—Consent of woman.]—(1) Held: the power of altering marriage settlements given to the ct. by Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (c. 61), s. 5, & Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878 (c. 19), s. 3, is limited to such alterations as are for the personal benefit of the husband, wife or children of the marriage. Where, therefore, a petitioner dies after obtaining a decree absolute for dissolution of the marriage & after presenting a petition for variation of the marriage settlement, & there are no children of the marriage, the petition for variation abates by the death of petitioner, & the proceedings cannot be continued by his personal representatives for the benefit of his estate.

(2) On a decree nisi for divorce being made on the petition of the husband, terms were arranged that petitioner should secure resp. £120 a year for life, & that she should consent to their marriage settlement being annulled:—Held: as resp. was by the marriage settlement restrained from anticipation, this agreement was not binding on her, & the objection could not be remedied under the powers given to the ct. by Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 39.

The first difficulty is that the sect. gives power to the ct. to free a married woman from a restraint on anticipation, & here we have not any married woman. But if she were a married woman, how could we say that it is for her benefit to make this agreement binding on her, when its effect is to give her £120 a year instead of £350 a year? 1010. Separate examination of woman—Necessity for—Dispensed with in special circumstances.]—A married woman was entitled to the income of a fund in ct. for her life, for her separate use without power of anticipation, with remainder in trust for her children, & in default of issue, in trust for such persons as she should, whether covert or sole, by will appoint, &, in default of appointment, to herself absolutely. She having had no children, & being past the age of childbearing, & having contracted a number of debts, for payment of which the creditors were pressing her & causing her great annoyance, she with her husband applied to the ct. to exercise its power under sect. 39 of Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), to remove the restraint on anticipation, & to order part of the fund to be paid out to her to enable her to pay her debts:—Held: whether she did or did not exercise her power of appointment, the fund would at her death be subject to the payment of her debts, & that under the circumstances the restraint on anticipation ought to be removed, & a portion of the fund paid out to appct.

The order was made upon the evidence of the married woman's consent afforded by an affidavit made by her in support of the application, & a letter written by her to her solrs., strongly urging them to obtain the money for her. Qu.: whether such an order ought in general to be made without ascertaining the consent of the married woman by a separate examination in the ordinary way.—HODGES v. HODGES (1882), 20 Ch. 1013. Discretionary power.]—The power which Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 39, gives to the ct. of dispensing with a restraint on anticipation is a discretionary power, to be exercised with great caution, & only where a strong case is made for it, & is not necessarily to be exercised because it will be for the benefit of the married woman. A fund was settled on a married woman for life for her separate use with a restraint on anticipation, remainder to her children & issue as she should appoint, & in default of appointment to the children equally, with cross limitations in the event of any dying under twenty-one without issue. She, being in straitened circumstances, arranged with her eldest son that his fifth share in a part of the trust funds should be applied in a specified way for her benefit. With a view to this she released her power of appointment over the trust funds, & then applied to the ct. to have the fifth share of the son in the agreed part of the funds together with her life interest therein sold, & the proceeds applied as above:—Held: the ct. would not in the exercise of its discretion dispense with the restraint on anticipation in order to give effect to a release executed by the donee of the power for her own benefit.—Re LITTLE, HARRISON v. HARRISON (1889), 40 Ch. 1018. Discrimination in exercise—Necessity for.]—A married woman was, under the will of testator, entitled to the income of a share of his residuary estate for her life for her separate use without power of anticipation. The will contained a proviso for forfeiture in the event of such person charging, alienating, or assigning such income or any part thereof by any act of theirs, or by bkpcy., or other act or operation of law. There was a gift over of the income in the event of forfeiture. She applied to the ct., under sect. 39 of Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), that, notwithstanding the restraint on anticipation, she might be at liberty to bind her life interest under the will for the purpose of raising a loan:—Held: the application must be refused, as it might involve a forfeiture of her life interest.

1024. —— ——.]—This is an appeal from the decision of a judge upon a matter of discretion under sect. 39 of Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41). . . . I do not think that this ct. ought to lay down any principle as to the way in which the discretion should be exercised, though one element in coming to a conclusion is the inception of the debts (COLLINS, L.J.).

The sect. [39 of Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41)], requires for its exercise that the ct. should be satisfied that it would be for the benefit of the married woman, & subject to that the Legislature has left it to the ct. to decide. The Legislature not having laid down any rules, it is not for the ct. to do so. Each case must be decided on its own merits. The debts in this case have been incurred by gross extravagance, & the ct. ought not to lay down that where a person incurs debts through extravagant living he or she can come to the ct. for assistance in paying off those debts (STIRLING, L.J.).—Re GIORGI, GIORGI v. WOOD (1901), 45 Sol. Jo. 615, C. A.

1025. —— Life interest bound.]—Upon the application of a married woman, the ct. made an order, under Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 39, binding her life interest under her marriage settlement, notwithstanding restraint on anticipation, by approving a scheme for discharging her debts & liabilities, the ct. being of opinion that the scheme was for the benefit of the married woman, within the sect.—Re WILSON-STEWART, KEOWN-BOYD v. GILMOUR (1896), 75 L. 1026. —— Due to moneylender.]—(1) I desire to state as a rule that I cannot relieve married women from the restraint on anticipation in cases where they have gone to moneylenders. . . . No case here has been established which would justify me in exercising my discretion by acceding to the application (CHITTY, J.).

(2) There is another point in this case, a prosecution has been instituted against the lady for stealing furniture, & it is further asked that the restraint should be removed, so as to enable her to defend herself. . . . It is undoubtedly for the benefit of the married woman to defend herself under such circumstances . . . & I will listen to an application in chambers in the event of her being committed for trial (CHITTY, J.).—Re POLLARD'S SETTLEMENT, [1896] 1 Ch. 901; 65 L. 1027. Husband's debts—Responsibility undertaken by wife—Actions against wife.]—A wife living with her husband was entitled to an income of £1,700 for her separate use without power of anticipation. Her husband was without any means, & had been adjudged bkpt. The wife had given acceptances to many of her husband's creditors, & was harassed with actions, & a county ct. order for attachment in event of non-payment had been made against her. She was also suffering in health from the anxiety produced by pecuniary embarrassment:—Held: the case was one in which the ct. would, in the exercise of its discretion under Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 39, make an order relieving part of the wife's income from the restraint on anticipation, in order that a sum might be raised to satisfy creditors.—Re C.'S SETTLEMENT (1887), 56 L. The object of the restraint on anticipation is to protect the wife from the husband, & if I yield in the present case, I shall be going in the teeth of the rule (KEKEWICH, J.).—Re A., B. v. C. H. married with M.'s consent. M. having died, his exor. & residuary legatee brought an action against H. & her husband claiming that the deed did not bind M.'s estate. Terms of compromise having been arranged under which H. was to receive a lump sum in discharge of the deed of covenant, the ct. was asked to sanction the arrangement on behalf of H. under Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 39. The ct. considering the terms of compromise to be for H.'s benefit, sanctioned the arrangement, but directed that H. should attend to give her consent by separate examination before the judge in the ordinary way.—MUSGRAVE v. SANDEMAN (1883), 48 L. n. For sale of life interest.]—The judge being satisfied that it would be for the advantage of the married woman, made an order, on summons in Chambers, accepting an advantageous offer for the sale of her life interest in a fund, under Conveyancing & Law of marriage, with an ultimate remainder to the husband. The wife was now fifty years old & the husband fifty-three, they had been married twenty-eight years, & there was no issue of the marriage, & there was evidence that it was almost, if not entirely, impossible that there could be any. Both husband & wife were in a delicate state of health, & the income of the property was so small that they could not afford the comforts which in consequence of the wife's health it was important she should have. They now applied to the ct., under sect. 39 of Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), to remove the restraint on anticipation, & to make such an order binding the interest of the wife as would enable the capital of the trust fund to be applied for the benefit of the husband & wife :—Held : the application must be refused as the ct. could not assume that the wife was past childbearing.

Sect. 39 of the Act does not give the ct. a general power of removing the restraint on anticipation, but only to bind the interest of a married woman restrained from anticipation who has disposed of her property, where the ct. is of opinion that that disposition is beneficial to her.—Re WARREN'S SETTLEMENT (1883), 52 L. Three of the daughters had married with testator's concurrence before the date of his will, & each of them on her marriage had settled her interest under her mother's marriage settlement upon trusts for herself & her husband respectively for life, she being restrained from anticipation, with power for them jointly or for the survivor to appoint to their issue, & default of appointment upon usual trusts for their children with a gift over in default of issue for her statutory next of kin.

Testator was a party to two of these settlements. On the question whether the married daughters were bound by the condition:—Held: the condition was a condition subsequent, & the married daughters, having on their marriage in testator's lifetime with his concurrence settled their interests under their mother's marriage settlement, were exempt from the performance of the condition. 1048. Order for payment of costs—Out of income accrued at date of order.]—Where costs are ordered to be paid by a married woman, suing under Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), without a next friend, payment of them can be enforced against any separate property to which she is entitled free from restraint on alienation at the time when the order to pay costs is made, & not only against separate property which she is so entitled at the time when she commences the proceedings.

Where a married woman entitled under a will to income given to her separate use, with a restraint on anticipation, without fixing any days of payment, was ordered to pay to the trustees the costs of certain proceedings taken by her without a next friend:—Held: the trustees ought to be allowed to retain these costs out of a balance of income which was in their hands at the time when the order to pay costs was made, though it was not in hand at the time when she commenced the proceedings, the restraint on anticipation having ceased as to any sums forming part of the income so soon as they came to the hands of the trustees, & this was not altered by the fact that by an order made in a suit for administering the estate she was prevented from calling for payment of these sums till a later period. The decision in Re Glanvill, Ellis v. Johnson, No. 1051, post, that only such estate is liable as the married woman is entitled to when she commences the proceedings does not apply where the proceedings are taken under Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), without a next friend.—COX v. BENNETT, [1891] 1 Ch. 617; 60 L. Costs of successful appeal—Set off against costs payable by next friend.]—(1) A married woman, by her next friend, having brought in 1882 an action for administration of a trust fund, to the income of which she was entitled for her separate use without power of anticipation, the ct. on further consideration in 1884, held the action to have been unnecessary & improper, & the next friend was ordered to pay defts.' costs. Defts. being unable to find the next friend, an order was made giving the trustees liberty to retain the costs out of the income of the trust fund already due & to become due to the married woman:—Held: no such order could be made, for that the ct. has no jurisdiction to disregard the restraint on anticipation on the ground that it appears to the ct. to be just to do so; & no income which did not accrue due till after the act on which the claim against the separate estate depended, viz. the improper institution of the suit, could be attached to meet the costs. Qu.: whether, if pltf. had been suing under Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), without a next friend, the order could have been supported. (2) The appeal being allowed with costs:—Held: the costs must be set off against the costs which the next friend had been ordered to pay, although the notice of appeal did not purport to be given through the next friend, for that so long as he remained on the record as next friend the proceedings on behalf of pltf. must be taken as carried on by him.

(3) Semble: the ct. could notwithstanding the restraint, touch any income in the hands of her trustees which has accrued prior to the act creating such liability.—Re GLANVILL, ELLIS v. JOHNSON (1886), 31 Ch. 1052. Judgment in matrimonial cause against wife—Sequestration for costs—Action by wife against trustee for accrued income—Payment into court.]—By marriage settlement in 1856 certain property was settled to the separate use of the wife for life, without power of anticipation, with divers remainders over. In 1866 the wife left her husband, & in 1868 he instituted a suit against her in the Divorce Ct. for restitution of conjugal rights. Judgment was given against the wife with costs. The wife withdrew from the jurisdiction, & declined in any way to obey the judgment. In Mar. 1870, the husband procured from the Divorce Ct. a writ of sequestration against the separate property of the wife for the costs of the suit.

In Oct. 1869, certain instalments of dividends & interest on the settled property fell due, & were received by one of the trustees, who retained it in his hands. In Dec. 1869, a hostile suit was instituted by the wife against the trustee to compel the payment of the dividends & interest in question, & for the removal of the trustee, but not asking for the general administration of the trust fund. The trustee, by his answer, admitted that he had in his hands the sum of £6,105 1*s.* 9*d.* being the greater part of the entire fund. A few days after filing his answer the trustee filed a bill in the Rolls Ct. for the administration of the trusts of the settlement. On motion by the wife, in the first of the two suits, that the trustee might be ordered to pay into ct. the entire sum admitted by him to be in his hands:—Held: regard being had principally to the restraint on anticipation contained in the settlement, the money ought to be paid into ct., notwithstanding the writ of sequestration, & notwithstanding that the wife's bill had not prayed the general administration of the trust fund; the question of costs being reserved to the hearing.—MILLER v. MILLER (1870), 18 W. On Jan. 15, 1894, a writ of sequestration, with the same proviso as to restraint, to enforce payment of the costs was issued against such separate estate. On application for a second writ of sequestration or for a receiver of the rents of the separate estate in arrear on Mar. 25, 1894 :—Held : judgment could not be enforced against the arrears of rent, & sect. 2 of the Act did not give the ct. jurisdiction to alter an order for payment of costs made before that Act came into operation, or to make a new order therefor.—Re LUMLEY, Ex p. HOOD BARRS, [1894] 3 Ch. 135; *sub nom. (b) "Action or Proceeding Instituted."

1058. General rule—Proceeding must initiate litigation.]—Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (c. 63), s. 2, only contemplated the case of a married woman pltf. Although unsuccessful, she cannot be made to pay the costs of interlocutory proceedings taken, or appeals brought by her, in an action in which she is deft.

Wherever a married woman commences litigation as pltf., then if at any step in the action, or in any proceeding in the action, she is ordered to pay the costs, the ct. in such an action, or proceeding, or litigation can order the costs to be paid out of her separate estate which she is restrained from anticipating. The costs will be set off (DAVEY, L.J.).

The question which we have to consider is, what is the true construction of the words "in any . . . proceeding now or hereafter instituted by a woman or by a next friend on her behalf?" It is contended it will include appeals or applications of any kind, made by a married woman who is so sued, in which she is unsuccessful. It appears to me the language does not apply to such a case as that. The word "instituted" is important, & means some proceeding in which the woman is the actor at starting, & applies to such a case as an originating summons, petition, or originating motion, something which really commences proceedings, & I do not think the expression "proceedings" does include motions moved or appeals brought by a married woman deft. Where frivolous appeals are brought & the married woman is not pltf., I do not think the language is large enough to apply to such proceedings (LINDLEY, L.J.).—HOOD BARRS v. CATHCART, [1894] 3 Ch. 376; 63 L. Where, therefore, in the subsequent interpleader proceedings she fails to establish her claim to the goods, the ct. has jurisdiction under that sect. to order payment of the execution creditor's costs of the interpleader proceedings out of property of claimant which is subject to a restraint on anticipation & to enforce payment by the appointment of a receiver.—NUNN & CO. v. TYSON, [1901] 2 K. 1064. —— Intervening in probate action—Independent interest in subject-matter.]—A summons by a married woman under R. C. S., 1883, Ord. 12, r. 23, & Probate Court Rules, 1862, r. 6, for leave to intervene in a pending probate action for the purpose of asserting her independent interest in the subject-matter, is a "proceeding instituted" by her within sect. 2 of Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (c. 63), & therefore the ct. has jurisdiction to order, if it thinks fit, the costs of the action, as from the date of the summons to intervene, to be paid out of her separate property, including property which is subject to a restraint on anticipation.

The fact that the married woman may have obtained an order giving her leave to intervene in the action "as pltf." followed by a delivery to deft. of a pleading whereby she "adopts the pleadings of the pltf.," does not the less render her intervention a "proceeding instituted" by her within the sect.—CRICKITT v. CRICKITT, [1902] P. 177; 71 L. J. P. 65; 86 L. T. 635; 18 T. L. R. 584, C. A.

1065. —— Application for new trial.]—Where, in an action brought by a married woman, an application by her for a new trial was dismissed with costs:—Held: the ct. had jurisdiction under Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (c. 63), s. 2, to order payment of those costs out of her separate property subject to a restraint on anticipation.—DRESEL v. ELLIS, [1905] 1 K. 1066. —— Divorce proceedings—Costs of intervener.]—A wife, having presented a petition for dissolution of marriage on the ground of cruelty & adultery, in her particulars alleged that the adultery had been committed with R. An order was made on Oct. 10, 1911, giving R. leave to intervene & directing her to file an answer within fourteen days. The intervener filed an answer, & at the trial the jury found that there had been no misconduct between her & resp., & petitioner was ordered to pay her costs. Under her marriage settlement petitioner was entitled to the income of realty for her life without power of anticipation. Intervener issued a summons for the appointment of a receiver of the life estate. Immediately after the conclusion of the first proceedings petitioner presented a second petition for dissolution of marriage. This was undefended, & a decree nisi was pronounced on July 9, 1912. On July 22 an order was made by the judge that the trustees of petitioner's settlement should, notwithstanding the restraint on anticipation, pay half her income to intervener from the date of the summons up to decree absolute, towards satisfaction of her costs. On Mar. 18, 1913, the summons was ordered to stand over until the decree nisi had been made absolute. Petitioner appealed & intervener gave cross-notice of appeal:—Held: intervener was an "opposite party" within sect. 2 of Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (c. 63); the discretionary power of the ct. was not exhausted by the order of July 22, 1912; the property which the ct. could deal with under the sect. was the whole property which was subject to the restraint on anticipation, & not merely the portion of the property which for the time being was effectively restrained from anticipation, that was to say, during coverture; the matter must be remitted to the judge to be dealt with according to his discretion.—STUDLEY v. STUDLEY, [1913] P. 119; 82 L. 1071. —— Application for custody of child—After divorce decree absolute—Applicant in contempt.]—The decree nisi for the dissolution of a marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery directed that the child of the marriage should remain in the custody of the husband until further order, & should not be removed out of the jurisdiction without the sanction of the ct. At that time the child was with the wife out of England, & on the same day an order was made ex p. in chambers that the child should be forthwith delivered up to the husband, & should remain in his custody until further order. After the decree nisi had been made absolute the wife, who had in the meantime married the co-resp., came to England with the child. She then took out a summons asking that the decree nisi & the ex p. order might be varied by entrusting the custody of the child to herself. Pending the hearing of this summons, the wife by her counsel gave an undertaking not to remove the child out of the jurisdiction without the consent of the ct. On Mar. 10, 1903, the President ordered that the summons be dismissed & that the wife should pay the husband's costs, those costs to be payable out of her separate property, notwithstanding that it was subject to a restraint on anticipation. It was further ordered that the child should be forthwith delivered up by the wife to the husband, & should remain in his custody until further order.

Immediately after this order was made it was found that the wife had sent the child out of England two or three days previously & had herself followed on the day on which the order was made. She had since remained out of the jurisdiction with the child. On Mar. 12 the President pronounced the wife in contempt for breach of her undertaking, & ordered her to be attached for her contempt, & another order was made the same day for her committal for her contempt in non-compliance with the ex p. order that the child be not removed out of the jurisdiction. On May 12 the wife gave notice of appeal from so much of the order of Mar. 10 as directed the payment of costs out of her separate property, notwithstanding that it was subject to a restraint on anticipation. It was alleged that under the circumstances the ct. had no jurisdiction under sect. 2 of Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (c. 62), to make the order as to the payment of the costs:—Held: (1) notwithstanding her contempt, applt. was entitled to be heard; (2) the summons was not a "proceeding instituted by" the wife, within 1082 i. Advancement of child—Benefit under settlement—No provision for maintenance—Restraint removed in part.]—Restraint on anticipation of personalty settled by a married woman on herself for life, with remainder to her husband for life, was removed so as to allow a sum of £500, which she & her husband had appointed to their son, the only child of the marriage, free from his contingent life interest, but subject to her life interest, to be raised by the trustees of the settlement, & expended in buying cattle & implements of husbandry for the purpose of starting the son as a practical farmer, & relieving the husband & wife of the expense of maintaining him.—Re SAWYER'S TRUSTS, [1896] 1 I. R. 40.—IR.

s. ——.]—Pltf., a married woman, applied to the ct., with the consent of her husband, to remove a restraint on anticipation of certain funds accruing to her under a marriage settlement, & in which she had a life interest. After her death her husband took a life interest, & the funds then went as she should by deed or will appoint, or in default to her children. Her husband released his life estate, & the reason for her application was to obtain money to start her sons as farmers:—Held: the application should be granted.—BROWN v. FULLERTON-SMITH (1911), 31 N. 1091. Married woman trustee of realty for sale—Deed acknowledged—Concurrence of husband.]—Testator devised his real estate to trustees for sale who were married women one of them having married before & the other after Married Women's Property Act, 1882. Both of them also took beneficial interests in the proceeds of sale. Under the judgment in an action for the administration of testator's estate, part of the real estate was sold by the trustees, the purchaser paying his purchase money into ct.:—Held: the married women were "bare trustees" within Vendor & Purchaser Act, 1874 (c. 78), s. 6, the conveyance to the purchaser did not require the concurrence of the husbands or acknowledgment under Fines & Recoveries Act.—Re DOCWRA, DOCWRA v. FAITH (1885), 29 Ch. b. —— —— Wife deserted by husband.]—J. H., by his will dated Apr. 14, 1874, devised property to his daughter, M. A. J., for life, with remainder to her children, & died soon after making the will. M. A. J. died about 1880, leaving five children, the youngest of whom came of age in 1884. Before the death of J. H., one of the children, M. J. J., married one C., & C. in 1870 deserted his wife & had not been heard of afterwards:—Held: M. J. C. could convey her interest in the property without the concurrence of her husband.—Re COULTER & SMITH (1885), 8 O. R. 536.—CAN.

c. —— ——.]—A woman, married in 1867 without marriage settlement, acquired lands in 1879, by deed of conveyance to her in fee simple absolute:—Held: she could convey the lands without the concurrence of her husband.—Re KONKLE (1887), 14 O. R. 183.—CAN.

d. —— ——.]—A woman married between 1859 & 1872, who had issue living & capable of inheriting, acquired before the year 1872 a vested remainder in fee in land subject to a life estate, & in 1886, the life tenant still being alive, conveyed her remainder by deed without her husband joining therein:—Held: the conveyance was valid to pass her whole interest freed from any right, interest, or control of her husband, & the life tenant having died, a good title in fee simple under the conveyance could be made.—Re GRACEY & TORONTO REAL ESTATE CO. 1093. Under Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75)—To what property applicable—Only property acquired during coverture.] — Banking accounts were kept in the joint names of husband & wife, & investments in railway stock were made in their joint names. The wife survived her husband five days, having executed a will during coverture:—Held: the balances of the joint accounts & the joint investments survived to the wife, but did not pass under her will.—Re YOUNG, TRYE v. SULLIVAN (1885), 28 Ch. D. 705; 54 L. J. Ch. 1065; 52 L. T. 754; 33 W. R. 729.

1094. —— —— —— Re-execution of will after discoverture.]—Above Act, s. 1 (1) gives a married woman power to dispose by will only of property of which she is seised or possessed while she is under coverture. Consequently, notwithstanding Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 24, her will made during coverture is not, unless it is re-executed after she has become discovert, effectual to dispose of property which she acquires after the coverture has come to an end.—Re PRICE, STAFFORD v. STAFFORD (1885), 28 Ch. 1095. —— —— ——.] — By marriage settlement in 1863 the wife's property was limited, in default of issue, upon trust for her absolutely if she survived her husband, but if she should die in his lifetime then upon such trusts as she should by will appoint, & in default of appointment for her next of kin. She during coverture made a will dated in 1886, by which, if she should die during the coverture, she appointed the fund to trustees upon certain trusts, & she bequeathed to them upon the same trusts all the property she could dispose of by will. She survived her hasband & died without republishing her will, never having had any issue:—Held: the will did not dispose of the settled property. Above Act, s. 1 (1), is to be construed along with sects. 2 & 5, & does not give a married woman power to dispose of property not falling within the scope of either of the two latter sects.—Re CUNO, MANSFIELD v. MANSFIELD (1889), 43 Ch. 1097. —— Effect of prior restrictive statute—Church Building Act, 1802 (c. 108).]—Where an Act of Parliament dealing in a special way with a particular subject matter is followed by a general Act dealing in a general way with the subjects of the previous legislation, general words in the general Act are not to be held as repealing the prior special legislation, unless the general Act contains some reference to the special legislation, or unless the general Act cannot be given effect to without such a repeal.

The proviso at the end of sect. 1 of the Act of Geo. 3, excepting "women covert without their husbands" from the power conferred by the Act to make gifts of land or personalty for the purpose of building churches is not repealed by above Act, s. 1 (1). Where, therefore, a married woman bequeathed £300 to the vicar & churchwardens of a church to be applied in the erection of a new church:—Held: the bequest was invalid.—Re SMITH'S ESTATE, CLEMENTS v. WOOD (1887), 35 Ch. k. —— Lease—Ratification by husband.]—Both pltf. & deft. claimed title, through De B., who had acquired it from her husband during coverture. De B. & her trustees under a deed of settlement, gave a renewable lease of it to deft., but her husband did not join in this lease, & after her death he conveyed all his rights in the property to deft. Pltf. obtained his title to the property through a deed given by the trustees of the children of De B. after her death:—Held: the lease by De B. was void, & the conveyance by the husband, after his wife's death, did not confirm the lease, which could only be ratified during the joint lives of the husband & wife, & the deed from the heirs to pltf. was valid.—MARITIME NAIL CO., LTD. v. GREGORY (1922), 49 N. SECT. 4.—UNDER POWERS OF APPOINTMENT.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

See Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 4.

1104. Nature of power—Whether separate property of wife.]—The ct. made an order for the trustees of a wife's settled property, against whom a decree of judicial separation had been pronounced on the ground of her adultery, to pay a moiety of the income of such property for the maintenance & education of the children. The ct. cannot vary a power of appointment vested in a guilty wife.

1108. Married woman may execute power—Over realty & personalty.]—A feme covert, described as such in the will of testator, may, during the coverture, execute by deed a power of disposition, given her by the will, over real & personal estate.—DOWNES v. TIMPERON (1828), 4 Russ. 331; 38 E. R. 831.

1109. —— Over capital & income.]—A wife who lives with her husband & has separate property over which she has a power of appointment by deed or will, is entitled to dispose not only of the capital, but also of the savings out of income & that by a general residuary clause in her will.—HUMPHERY v. RICHARDS (1856), 25 L. J. Ch. 442; 27 L. T. O. S. 95; 2 Jur. N. S. 432; 4 W. R. 432.

1110. Covenant to appoint to trustees of settlement—Specific performance—Damages.]—The ct. will not decree specific performance of a contract to leave property by will entered into by a mere donee of a testamentary power of appointment. By a marriage settlement, executed in 1867, the husband & wife severally covenanted that all property whatsoever which the wife or the husband in her right should at any time during the coverture become possessed of or entitled to in any manner whatsoever should be settled, & that any power of appointment of which she might then or at any time thereafter during such coverture be the donee, should, if executed by her, be executed only in favour of the trustees of the settlement. During the coverture she became the donee of a general testamentary power of appointment over a sum of stock which, by her will, she exercised in favour of persons other than the trustees: —Held: the covenant could not be specifically enforced, but the trustees were entitled to recover by way of damages from the wife's exors. to the extent of her assets the value of the property which would have been in their favour; & the appointed fund was assets for the payment of her debts.

The marriage took place, & two sons having been born, A. by a will, referring to the power, gave, devised, & appointed the premises to her eldest son C., his heirs & assigns for ever, from & after the decease of B. upon condition, that he should pay to his brother D., the second son £200 within one year after the decease of B. or on D. attaining the age of twenty-one. The will then proceeded: "but, in case it shall happen that neither of my sons aforesaid shall be living at the decease of B. then I do give, devise, direct & appoint, the said copyhold messuage, etc., unto E., the father of B., his heirs & assigns," in trust for sale; subsequently to the date of the will, there were four other children born of the marriage. 1119. ——.]—A. executed a will by virtue of a power of appointment reserved to her on her first marriage in favour of B. She then married B., & subsequently executed a second will. It revoked in express terms all former wills & testamentary appointments, & purported to be made in exercise of the same power & also the power reserved in the settlement on the second marriage, which, however, did not refer to the property affected by the first settlement:—Held she had a right to revoke the first will so made by any of the methods prescribed by Wills Act. The ct., looking to the fact that the second will revoked in express terms the first, refused, on the suggestion that probate of both was necessary to enable the Ct. of Ch. to decide on the due execution of the powers, to grant probate of both wills, but granted probate of the second alone.

1136. .]—Testator by his will settled a legacy of £50,000 upon usual trusts for A., his wife & issue, & declared that if no issue of A. should attain a vested interest then the legacy should fall into & form part of his, testator's, residuary estate, & testator empowered the trustees on A.'s marriage & with his consent to revoke the trusts & to resettle the legacy upon such trusts for the benefit of A., his wife, & issue, & with such powers & provisions as the trustees should deem proper. By a codicil testator bequeathed a sum of £50,000 to his trustees to be held by them upon the trusts & with powers for the benefit of B., her husband, & issue, similar to those for the benefit of A., his wife, & issue, declared in his will concerning the £50,000 thereby settled, except that no part of the capital was to be paid or advanced to or for the benefit of B.

Both A. & B. were infants at the date of the will. After the death of testator B. married, being still an infant, & by a deed executed in contemplation of her marriage the trustees with her consent & in exercise of the power conferred on them by the will & codicil revoked the trusts of her legacy & resettled the same upon trusts for her benefit, & her husband & issue, which varied somewhat from those declared in the will; in particular the ultimate trust in default of her issue was for her absolutely. On the question whether the resettlement was valid regard to the fact that B. was an infant:—Held: (1) upon the true construction of the will & codicil testator intended to confer a power on B. during her minority to consent to an exercise by the trustees of their power of revocation & resettlement, & he could lawfully confer such a power upon her.

(2) The ultimate trust in the resettlement in default of B.'s issue for B. absolutely, was prohibited by the codicil, & therefore not authorised by the power to resettle.—Re SUTTON, BOSCAWEN v. WYNDHAM, [1921] 1 Ch. 257; 90 L. J. Ch. 71; 124 L. T. 526; 65 Sol. Jo. 155.

1137. —— —— —— Power in gross.]—An infant can exercise a power, collateral or in gross, over personal, & also over real property, in which he has an interest, provided such interest cannot be affected by the exercise of the power. By a settlement made in the name of a lady then an infant, & therein described as "an infant of the age of nineteen years & upwards," it was agreed that after her marriage, as soon as the case would admit, certain personal estate in which the infant took a vested interest on her marriage should be assigned to trustees upon trust for investment with the consent of husband & wife, & to pay the income to the wife for her separate use, & on her death to the husband till bkpcy. or alienation, & after trusts for the issue, in trust in default of issue for such person or persons as the wife should by deed or will appoint. An appointment by deed, while still a minor, was made by the wife in her husband's favour:—Held: such power, being a power collateral or in gross, could be exercised by an infant, & the appointment was valid; the settlement showed an intention that the power should be exercised during infancy, & the appointment was also valid on that ground.—Re D'ANGIBAU, ANDREWS v. ANDREWS (1880), 15 Ch. By her will, which purported to be in exercise of the power, the wife devised & bequeathed all her real & personal estate over which she had any disposing power to her exors. therein named. She then gave several legacies, which did not exhaust the fund, & appointed exors. She died in her husband's lifetime:—Held: the fund was, by the appointment, all converted into the wife's general personal estate, & hence the unexhausted portion belonged to the husband & not to the persons entitled in default of appointment under the settlement.—BRICKENDEN v. WILLIAMS (1869), L. Testatrix having, under a deed settlement, a general power of appointment over certain real estate, gave all the real & personal estate which she might be possessed of or entitled to, or of which by virtue of any power or authority she was competent to dispose, "in manner following"; & then, after making certain specific devises & bequests in which she treated the subject of her gifts as her own, she gave the property forming the subject of the power to her husband, & also made him her residuary legatee. Throughout her will she drew no distinction between property which belonged to her & property over which she had only a power of disposition. Her husband predeceased her:—Held: she had indicated her intention that the power should be exercised, & the property subject to it should be deemed hers for all purposes; &, consequently, it went to her heirs, & not as in default of appointment under the settlement.—COXEN v. ROWLAND, [1894] 1 Ch. 406; 63 L. 1148. —— —— ——.]—Under a settlement two sums of stock were vested in A., B., & C., as trustees, upon trust as testatrix, a married woman, should by will appoint, & in default of appointment upon other trusts. Testatrix, in exercise of that power, appointed that A., B., & C. should stand possessed of the said two sums in trust to pay a legacy of £2,000, which lapsed, & other legacies amounting to £6,100. She bequeathed to her husband £2,000, which she authorised her exors. to pay, & bequeathed to him her H. stock not included in the settlement. She directed that her funeral expenses be paid by her said trustees out of her said trust property, & that her legacies be paid free of duty. & as to all the residue of her personal estate whatsoever she bequeathed the same to her nephew, who died in her lifetime. She appointed A., B., & D. her exors. At the date of the will the value of the trust property was about £1,000, & she had no other property except the H. stock & some small savings of her separate estate:—Held: the trust property was intended by testatrix to be taken out of the settlement for all purposes, & having regard to Wills Act, s. 27, the balance, after payment of all the legacies, duty, & expenses, became part of her personal estate & passed to her husband.—Re PINÈDE'S SETTLEMENT (1879), 12 Ch. 1149. Will made during coverture—Wife becoming absolutely entitled when discovert—Necessity for republishing will.]—BISHOP v. WALL, No. 945, ante.

1150. —— —— —— Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (c. 63), s. 3.]—The effect of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 24, is to make the will of a testator operate upon all the property of which he dies possessed. Above sect. extends this clause to the will of a married woman made during coverture in respect of any after-acquired property, & precludes the necessity of such will being republished should the coverture have ceased.

Testatrix made her will in 1895, during the lifetime of her husband, & therein exercised a power of appointment given to her by her marriage settlement, dated 1861, in respect of the funds comprised in the settlement. In exercising the power she used the usual words "& of all other powers, if any, hereunto enabling me." By the death of her husband in 1905, without leaving any issue of the marriage, she became, by the terms of the settlement, absolutely entitled to the settled property. She died in 1908 a lunatic, without having revoked, altered, or republished her will :—Held : the appointments made by the will were clear intentions of testatrix to dispose of the settled property, & the effect of above sect. was to make those appointments valid dispositions of the funds in question, notwithstanding testatrix having subsequently become absolutely entitled. The words "all other powers hereunto enabling me" were applicable to the power given by above Act, & the case was not affected by the lady becoming a lunatic. The appointees must take in the shares specified.—Re JAMES, HOLE v. BETHUNE, [1910] 1 Ch. 157 ; 79 L. J. Ch. 45 ; 101 L. T. 625.

The trustees, at the request of the husband & wife, sold out the stock, & paid the proceeds to the husband, who afterwards became bkpt. The wife filed a bill to compel the trustees to replace the stock, & obtained a decree, under which the trustees transferred part of the stock into ct., & they were allowed time to transfer the remainder. The wife died, having by her will appointed the stock to her husband, & appointed him her exor. He filed a bill of revivor & supplement against the trustees & his assignees, claiming the stock under the appointment, & praying the same relief as his wife might have had. But, as he had received the proceeds of the stock sold out, his bill was dismissed.

A woman entitled to a sum of stock settled it on her marriage for her separate use for life, with power to her to appoint it by will only, but no trust was declared in default of appointment. After her marriage she signed a promissory note, & then by will appointed the stock to her husband. Semble : the holder of the note is not defeated thereby.

A married woman having a testamentary power to appoint a fund exercised it in favour of her husband, & appointed him her exor. :—Held : if the husband claimed the fund as his wife's exor. he must pay probate duty on the fund.—NAIL v. PUNTER (1832), 5 Sim. 555 ; 58 E. R. 447.

1155. —— Invalid exercise during coverture.]—S., by indenture, dated in Aug. 1845, transferred a sum of annuities into the names of two trustees & declared that they should stand possessed of the same, or the securities on which the same should be invested, & the dividends, & interest & annual produce arising therefrom, in trust for such person as S. should appoint, & in default of appointment in trust to pay the dividends, interest, & annual produce arising from the same, etc., unto, or permit the same to be received by S. during the time she should continue sole ; & in the event of her marriage, in trust to pay the dividends, etc., to S. during her life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation, & after the decease of S. in trust for her children, grandchildren, or other issue, to be born in her lifetime, to be vested in & paid to such children, etc., at such times as S., whether covert or sole, should appoint, & in default of such appointment in trust for all her children in equal shares absolutely, & if there should be no child of S., in trust for her next of kin. S., in May, 1848, intermarried with G., & by him had one child. By a deed poll dated in Feb. 1853, S., with the privity & concurrence of A., & in exercise of the power reserved to her by the indenture of 1845, appointed that the trustees should, after her decease, stand possessed of the fund to raise & pay a portion thereof to her husband G. for his own absolute use & benefit, & appointed the residue of the fund in trust for all her children by her then present or any future husband who should attain the age of twenty-five, to be divided equally among them, with a proviso in favour of the issue of those dying under twenty-five.

But if there should not be any child or other issue of S., then in trust to pay the interest, etc., to be, for his life, & after his decease in trust for her next of kin. S. died in July, 1854, leaving her husband & one son surviving :—Held : the deed poll of 1853 was wholly inoperative, & the son of S. was entitled to the fund but subject to the trusts of the original settlement.

The question here is whether the power reserved by this lady to herself generally to appoint the property in question, was so limited as that she had a right to exercise that general power after her marriage & during coverture. A power given to a woman while sole to make at any time an appointment of property in which she has an interest as well as the power over it, might, if there was nothing to control it, enable the power to be exercised by her during coverture. But the general proposition must be subject to control by the expressions to be found in the instrument (STUART, V.-C.).—GOULD v. GOULD (1856), 25 L. J. Ch. 642 ; 2 Jur. N. S. 484 ; 4 W. R. 516.

By his will, made in 1884, the father of M. bequeathed to the trustees of the will a sum of £4,000 upon trust for such persons & purposes as M. should appoint in writing, & in default of or subject to any such appointment in trust for her sole & separate use, & testator declared it to be his intention that M. might be able, by exercising her power of appointment, to defeat the operation of the covenant, contained in her marriage settlement for the settlement of her after-acquired property. Testator died in 1887. M. appointed that the sum of £4,000 should be held in trust for her separate use by nine separate appointments, made on separate days, & each under £500 in amount:—Held: the sum of £4,000 had been properly appointed by M., & was payable to her, & was not bound by her covenant to settle after-acquired property.—Re GERARD (LORD), OLIPHANT v. GERARD (1888), 58 L. 1162. Release benefiting third party—Independent advice—Validity.]—By a post-nuptial settlement made in 1890, certain funds, the property of the husband, were settled subject to the life interest of the husband's mother, upon trust for the husband for life, &, after his death for the wife for life, &, after the death of the survivor, in trust for children, & in default of issue as the husband & wife jointly should appoint, or in default of such appointment as the survivor should appoint, & in default of appointment for applts. W. & S. absolutely. The solr. who prepared the deed, & was one of the trustees under it, was the father of S., one of the ultimate beneficiaries. In 1891 the husband & his mother wishing to prevent the possibility of the wife, if she survived, exercising her power of appointment in favour of a second husband, had a deed prepared by which the wife's interest, should she survive, was limited to her widowhood, & her power of appointment was excluded, & the husband was given a sole power of appointment. This deed was prepared by the same solr., who stated that he explained its effect to the wife, & she was told that it was intended to correct a "mistake" in the previous settlement, & executed it in that belief, without any independent advice. In 1893 the husband died without having exercised his power of appointment & without issue. In 1894 a deed was executed by which the widow's interest was extended to a life interest, but in other respects confirming the deed of 1891. In 1897 the widow married resp., & in 1898 commenced this action, claiming a declaration that the deed of 1891 was not binding upon her, so far as it deprived her of the power of appointment conferred on her by the deed of 1890, & that the deed of 1894 was not binding so far as it confirmed the deed of 1891:—Held: in the circumstances the deed of 1891 must be set aside.—WILLIS v. BARRON, [1902] A. After testator's death A. executed a deed according to the mode described by the will; by which, after reciting that she was desirous of executing the power, she directed the trustees to transfer the fund to herself & a new trustee, upon such trusts & subject to such powers, etc., as A. should by deed, with or without power of revocation & new appointment, or by her last will, direct & appoint, with certain limitations over in default of appointment, similar to those contained in the will; in pursuance of which deed the fund was transferred into the names of A. & the new trustee. A. afterwards, by will by virtue & execution of that power, appointed the fund to be transferred to certain persons, in trust that the same might be consolidated with & become part of her residuary estate, & follow the dispositions thereof thereinafter mentioned:—Held: the deed executed by A. being an exercise of the power under the original will, the property thereby became liable to her debts, & became her personal estate, in which she had a beneficial interest, & consequently was liable to the payment of probate duty.—A.-G. v. STAFF (1833), 2 Cr. & M. 124; 4 Tyr. 14; 3 L. 1167. ——.]—The general engagements of a married woman are enforced by a ct. of equity against her separate estate, not as executions of a power of appointment, but on the principle that to whatever extent she has, by the terms of the settlement, the power of dealing with her separate property, she has also the other power incident to property in general, namely, the power of contracting debts to be paid out of it. Where a married woman whose real estate was settled, on her marriage, to such uses as she should, by any deed or instrument in writing, attested by one witness, or by her will, appoint & in default of appointment, upon trusts for her sole & separate use for life, with remainder over, made her will, in pursuance of the power, & thereby charged her real estate with payment of her debts:—Held: this was a good charge on the real estate of all her written engagements; & semble: also of her debts generally, whether evidenced by writing or not.—OWENS v. DICKENSON (1840), Cr. & Ph. 48; 4 Jur. 1151; 41 E. 1168. ——.]—By a marriage settlement certain freehold, leasehold, & personal property was vested in trustees upon trust for the wife during her life for her separate use, & after her decease for such persons as the wife should appoint by will, & in default of appointment for the benefit of the children of the marriage. The wife survived her husband, & appointed all her property by will to her children. She then privately married a second husband, but continued to pass as a widow, & describing herself as a widow she borrowed money & mortgaged her property to secure the repayment. A second marriage ceremony was afterwards publicly performed:—Held: the will was revoked as to the freehold estate by the second marriage; the execution of the power as to the rest of the property did not constitute that property separate estate of the married woman, nor was it liable as such to debts contracted during coverture; but the concealment of the second marriage amounted to an act of fraud, & the mtgee. was entitled to stand as a creditor upon the general assets, & if they were not sufficient, then the appointed property was liable to supply the deficiency as in the case of a feme sole.—VAUGHAN v. VANDERSTEGEN (1854), 2 Drew. 165, 363; 2 Eq. B., her husband, in her lifetime, obtained possession of the fund, & after her death transferred it to the trustees of a settlement made in contemplation of the marriage of C., his adopted daughter. Neither C., her husband, nor the trustees, had notice of the trusts of the original settlement. In a suit instituted after B.'s death, the will of A., appointing the fund in favour of B., was pronounced for, & the costs of the opponents of the will were ordered to be paid out of A.'s estate:—Held: the trustees of the settlement made on the marriage of C. were innocent purchasers for valuable consideration of the fund, & it therefore ceased in their hands to be part of A.'s estate, or to be chargeable with costs.

1176. Application of Act—Liabilities incurred before Act.]—An appointment by a married woman by will, in exercise of a general power of appointment by deed or will, or by will only, does not make the appointed property liable to engagements entered into with her on the credit of her separate estate prior to Jan. 1, 1883, the date of the commencement of Married Women's Property Act, 1882, sect. 1 of the Act applying only to contracts made after that date. In 1881 a married woman concurred with her husband in a mtge. & thereby covenanted with the mtgees. "with the intent to bind her separate estate," that she or her husband would pay the interest on the mtge. debt, & she assigned a life-policy to which, under Married Women's Property Act, 1870, she was entitled for her separate use, to the mtgees. as security, with other property belonging to & assigned by the husband, for the mtge. debt & interest. Subsequently, by another deed dated in 1881, certain prior mtge. debts on the husband's property were transferred to the same mtgees. the married woman being a party, with her husband, to the transfer, & covenanting, "with the intent to bind her separate estate," for payment by her or her husband of the interest on the several mtge. debts so transferred. The married woman joined in the mtge. & transfer only as surety for her husband. By a separation deed, dated in 1884, the married woman covenanted with her husband to pay the interest on the several mtge. debts. At the dates of the three deeds she had, besides separate estate consisting of the said policy & some furniture, a general power of appointment by will over a fund. In 1887 she died, leaving her husband surviving, & having by will appointed the fund to her infant daughter absolutely at twenty-one or marriage:—Held: the appointed fund was not liable to satisfy the married woman's obligations with the mtgees. since such obligations were incurred before the commencement of Married Women's Property Act, 1882; & the exercise of the power did not make the appointed property liable as assets of the appointor because such obligations were not strictly speaking debts:—Semble: even if the married woman's obligations had been incurred since the commencement of Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the fund would not have been liable as "separate property" of the married woman within sect. 1 (4).—Re ROPER, ROPER v. DONCASTER (1888), 39 Ch. 1177. Appointment made after.] A married woman, while under a protection order obtained by her under Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 21, is in the position of a feme sole as regards all property coming to her after the date of the order, & also for all purposes of contract; so that her execution by will since Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), of a general power of appointment created subsequently to the date of the protection order makes the property appointed liable, under sect. 4 of the latter Act, for debts or liabilities incurred by her while under the order, even though they may have been incurred before that Act, sect. 4 extending to an appointment since the Act by a married woman who had debts & liabilities existing at the date the Act came into operation.—Re HUGHES, BRANDON v. HUGHES, [1898] 1 Ch. 529; 67 L. 1179. —— — — ——.]—By a marriage settlement of June 2, 1890, testatrix on her marriage with Mr. A. assigned a reversionary interest to trustees upon trust, after the fund had been received by them, upon her request to raise thereout a sum not exceeding £7,000, & to pay the same to her for her separate use, but so that she should not have power to alienate or charge her interest in the £7,000 during coverture, & then upon trusts under which she took a general power of appointment. By an indenture of Jan. 29, 1891, in consideration of £10,000 advanced by A. to Mr. A. he covenanted to repay the same & interest, & testatrix covenanted that when the reversionary interest fell in she would immediately request the trustees to raise & pay to her £4,000, & that she, her exors. or administrators, would pay it over to A., or so much thereof as should be required to satisfy the amount then due. Mr. A. died, & on her second marriage with Mr. F. testatrix executed a new settlement of her reversionary interest upon trusts under which she had a general power of appointment. The reversionary interest fell into possession in 1901. Testatrix by her will exercised her power of appointment & thus made the fund liable for her debts & other liabilities under Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 4. She died in 1907. Only about £1,200 of the £10,000 had been repaid, & A. now claimed to be paid out of testatrix's estate the £4,000 under the covenant contained in the deed of Jan. 29, 1891. It was admitted that owing to the restraint on alienation contained in the first settlement the covenant was inoperative as a charge:—Held: inasmuch as on the evidence, testatrix had no separate estate in respect of which she could be supposed to have contracted at the time when she made the covenant, it did not constitute a contract with respect to her separate property for breach of which an action for damages would lie against her estate.—Re FIELDWICK, JOHNSON v. ADAMSON, [1909] 1 Ch. 1; 78 L. 1180. —— Appointment of legacy in satisfaction of debt—Satisfaction during testator's lifetime—Legacy available as assets.]—Under a marriage settlement the husband, in case he survived his wife, was entitled for life to the income of a moiety of the settled funds; & in the same event the wife had power to appoint by will the income of the other moiety to the husband for life, & also, in default of issue taking a vested interest in the settled funds, a general power of appointment by will over the capital thereof. By her will the wife appointed that the trustees of the settlement should raise out of the moiety of the settled fund to the income of which the husband was not entitled for life after her decease (inter alia) the following legacies, namely, "to my friend D. £1,100 in satisfaction of a debt to that amount due from me to her," etc., & subject as aforesaid should pay the whole income of that moiety to the husband for life. No debt was due to D. from the wife, but there was a debt of £1,165 due to D. from the husband, who repaid it after the wife's death. The wife's estate proved insufficient to pay her debts by more than the £1,100:—Held: the appointment of the legacy of £1,100 was an effectual appointment, & rendered that legacy assets for payment of the wife's creditors by Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 4.—Re HODGSON, DARLEY v. HODGSON, [1899] 1 Ch. 666; 68 L. 1182. Gift in default to executors & administrators.]—A feme covert having property settled to her separate use for life, with remainder as she should, notwithstanding coverture, by deed or will appoint, with remainder to her exors. or administrators, opened two accounts with her bankers, a private & an administration account, & directed the bankers by the joint letter of herself & her husband, to consider any overdraft on her private account secured by the administration account. The administration account was subject to the trusts of the settlement. At her death the private account was overdrawn:—Held: she had contracted so as to bind her separate estate, & the bankers had a lien on the administration account in respect of the overdrawn private account.—LONDON CHARTERED BANK OF AUSTRALIA v. LEMPRIÈRE (1873), L. During the husband's lifetime the wife frequently asked him for the money; but no proceedings to recover it were taken until after his death, which occurred in 1894:—Held: (1) the husband was affected with notice of the separate use, & was a trustee of the money for his wife; (2) Stat. Limitations was no defence to proceedings by her against his exors.: (3) the wife was entitled to be paid the amount of the legacy, with interest at 4 per cent. from the date of her husband's death.—WASSELL v. LEGGATT, [1896] 1 Ch. 554; 65 L. 1192. Under mistake—Reimbursement-Lien.]—The wife being entitled in equity to real estate under a contract of sale entered into before her marriage, the husband, after their marriage, completed the purchase & took the conveyance to himself; afterwards, acting upon the supposition that the estate was his own, the husband laid out money in improvements upon it, & ultimately, in the lifetime of the wife, under the same mistake, sold the estate, & the purchasers took a conveyance from him. The husband survived the wife. After the death of the husband the heir-at-law of the wife recovered the estate from the purchasers by a suit in equity:—Held: the husband & the purchasers from him were entitled in that suit to a lien on the estate in respect of the purchase-money paid by the husband. Semble: also, in respect of the moneys expended on lasting improvements.—NEESOM v. CLARKSON (1845), 4 Hare, 97; 9 Jur. 822; 67 E. R. 576.

1193. —— Reimbursement—Rents received by husband.]—A husband contracted for a lease of some premises, & he afterwards induced the trustees of his marriage settlement, who held moneys for the separate use of his wife, without power of anticipation, to act in breach of their trust, & to purchase the property. The property was conveyed to the trustees, &, by a deed executed by the husband & wife, it was declared that it should be held for their indemnity & on the trusts of the settlement. The husband laid out very considerable sums of money in building & repairs, &, with the consent of the wife, was permitted to receive the rents. After some years, disputes arose; the trustees insisted on receiving the rents, & proceeded at law to enforce their rights; whereupon the husband filed a bill against the trustees & his wife, claiming a lease under the agreement, & asking for a sale of the property, & for the application of the produce, first in replacement of the trust funds, & afterwards in reimbursing pltf. his outlay. A motion for a receiver was refused with costs.—WILES v. COOPER (1846), 9 Beav. 294; 15 L. J. Ch. 129; 50 E. R. 357.

p. Expenditure on estate—Building erected by husband—Liability of wife.]—Land was conveyed to deft., "to & for her separate use for ever." Deft.'s husband employed pltf. to build on this land, & pltf. rendered his account to the husband, knowing nothing of deft. in the matter:—Held: deft. was not liable; for although the land was her separate estate, it could not be said that this work was done at her request or on her credit, or that there was any contract with her.—WAGNER v. JEFFERSON (1876), 37 U. C. R. 551.—CAN.

q. —— —— ——.]—Pltf. & her husband, were married in Feb. 1865, pltf. then owning land in fee simple. Deft. expended $2,000, on improving the lands. SUB-SECT. 3.—DISCHARGE OF INCUMBRANCE ON WIFE'S PROPERTY.

1195. Husband entitled to charge on estate—In absence of contrary intention.] — A husband paying off an incumbrance, subject to which the estate stands limited to his wife for life for her separate use with remainder as she shall by will appoint, is, in the absence of evidence of a contrary intention, entitled to the charge as against the estate.

Whether it is a charge on the husband's estate which is paid by the wife, or a charge on the wife's estate paid by the husband, the same presumption attaches to the transaction.—OUTRAM v. HYDE (1875), 24 W. R. 268.

1196. Part principal repaid—Subsequently reborrowed by husband—Total amount repayable on redemption.]—Baron & feme by deed & fine mortgage the wife's land for £400, the husband pays in part of the principal, & afterwards borrows the same sum again of the mtgee. Decreed the heir of the wife should not redeem without paying off both sums.—RAYSON v. SACHEVEREL (1682), 1 Vern. 41; 23 E. R. 295; sub nom. RAUSON v. SACHEVEREL, 2 Cas. in Ch. 98, L. C.

1197. —— Mortgage before marriage—Right to recoupment.]—Feme sole makes a mtge., & afterwards marries; the mtge. is then transferred, & the husband joins in the transfer, & covenants to pay the money. During the coverture, the husband by gradual payments out of his own property reduces the money due upon the mtge.; by his will he makes a disposition of the mortgaged premises, & dies in the lifetime of his wife; upon a bill by the wife, who claimed to be entitled by survivorship, to redeem the mtge.; the redemption was decreed upon the terms, that the husband's estate should stand in the place of the mtgee., for the sums paid by him out of his own property in reduction of the mtge. debt.—PITT v. PITT (1823), Turn. & R. 180; 37 E. 1198. Repayment before marriage—No marriage settlement—No gift presumed.] — Previously to a marriage then in contemplation, the intended husband, by his agent, paid off two equitable mtge. debts of the intended wife, secured by a deposit of title deeds belonging to her. He did this apparently to save the expense of a legal mtge., which would otherwise have been required by the mtgees. The title deeds still remained in the custody of the mtgees. The marriage was solemnised; there was no settlement, or agreement for a settlement. There was no issue of the marriage; the husband predeceased the wife intestate. His widow took out administration to him:—Held: the husband did not intend to make a gift to the wife of the money which he had paid for her, & the debt still existed on the security of the equitable mtge. in favour of the personal estate of the deceased husband.—GOOCH v. GOOCH (1851), 17 L. (c. 93), had insured his life, & had paid one premium on the insurance, after the passing of the Act gave up the policy & received instead a policy at the same premium for a sum payable to the separate use of his wife if she survived him, & to him if he survived her. He was at the time in embarrassed circumstances, & soon afterwards came under liquidation by arrangement, & then died. His wife had separate income subject to a restraint on anticipation:—Held: (1) the insurance must be taken as affected after the passing of Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (c. 93), & whether the subsequent premiums were paid by the husband out of his own money or out of the income of the wife's separate estate, the money payable on the insurance did not go to the trustee under the bkpcy., but went to the widow by virtue of Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (c. 93), which modified Bkpcy. Act, 1869 (c. 71), s 91; (2) on the evidence, the premiums were paid out of the wife's separate estate, &, therefore, the trustee in bkpcy. would not receive out of the insurance money the amount of the premiums.—HOLT v. EVERALL (1876), 2 Ch. 1211. —— —— ——.]—A husband effected a policy for the benefit of his wife & children under above Act, & died insolvent. His wife & one child of the marriage predeceased him. Upon a petition by his surviving children, under sect. 10 of above Act, for the appointment of a trustee of the policy money & for a declaration as to the rights of the petitioners:—Held: (1) the ct. had, under the sect. no jurisdiction to do more than make the order appointing a trustee; but since under the policy there was a trust either for the wife for life with remainder to the children, or, in the alternative, for the wife & children as joint tenants, the order was directed to be prefaced with an expression of opinion that the wife took no interest, & that the surviving children took as joint tenants. (2) Semble: a policy effected by a husband under sect. 10 of above Act, "for the benefit of his wife & children" should be read in conjunction with that sect., & should, by virtue of the words "separate use" in the sect., be considered as giving the wife a life interest only, with remainder to the children.—Re ADAM'S POLICY TRUSTS (1883), 23 Ch. The assured died leaving a widow & five children:—Held: the widow & children took the money payable under the policy as joint tenants.—Re DAVIES' POLICY TRUSTS, [1892] 1 Ch. 90; 61 L. J. Ch. 650; 66 L. T. 104.

1217. —— —— Children born before & after policy—Right of children by second marriage.]—A man who had a wife & four children effected a policy of assurance on his life under above Act. The policy was expressed to be "for the benefit of his wife, or if she be dead between his children in equal proportions." The wife died, having had four more children after the issue of the policy. The assured subsequently married again, & had one child by his second wife. On his death, leaving his widow & nine children him surviving:—Held: the widow was not entitled to participate in the policy moneys, but they went to the children of the first & second marriages in equal shares.—Re GRIFFITHS' POLICY, [1903] 1 Ch. 739; 72 L. 1220. —— Insurance on life of wife—For benefit of children—Reference by recital to Act.]—In 1872, a married woman insured her life by a policy which contained a recital that she was desirous to effect an insurance in terms of the provisions of above Act for the benefit of her children. She survived her husband, & died in 1914, having by her will bequeathed the policy moneys to four of her children only:—Held: (1) the contract was with the married woman alone; (2) no interest passed to the children by reason merely of their being mentioned in the policy, & the four legatees were entitled to the policy moneys. —Re BURGESS'S POLICY (1915), 85 L. 1223. —— —— Appointment to second wife—Widow entitled.]—A man, having a wife living, effected two policies on his life in accordance with the provisions of sect. 10 of above Act. The policy moneys were expressly made payable to his widow & children, or some or one of them, as he should by deed or will appoint. His wife died, he married again, & by deed appointed the policy moneys to his second wife if she should survive him & become his widow. He died leaving his second wife & children of both marriages surviving:—Held: (1) an after-taken wife is within above Act & the widow was entitled to the moneys. For this purpose there is no difference between sect. 10 of above Act, 1870, & Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 11; (2) on the construction of the policies, if the second wife were outside above Act, she would still have been entitled by virtue of the contract with the insurance co.—Re PARKER'S POLICIES, [1906] 1 Ch. 526; 94 L. 1224. Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75)—Joint policy in favour of survivor—Within Act.]—A husband has as such an insurable interest in his wife's life; & therefore it is not necessary in order to establish the validity of a policy of insurance effected by a husband upon the life of his wife to give affirmative evidence as to the existence & extent of a pecuniary interest of the husband in the life of his wife. The interest is presumed to the extent of the amount insured by the policy. A husband & his wife effected with an insurance association a policy whereby, in consideration of a premium of which each paid part, a sum of money was made payable upon the death of whichever of them should die first to the survivor. The wife having died, the husband brought an action upon the policy to recover the policy money:—Held: upon the footing that the policy was an insurance by the husband upon the life of the wife, notwithstanding Life Assurance Act, 1774 (c. 48), it was not necessary, in order to maintain the action, that pltf. should prove that he had any pecuniary interest in the life of his wife.

I am of opinion that this policy should be read distributively as an insurance by the wife on her own life expressed to be for the benefit of her husband contingently on his surviving her, & by the husband on his own life for the benefit of his wife contingently on her surviving him; & that such an insurance is perfectly legal; but inasmuch as the wife's insurance takes effect under Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 11, the husband would have to take out administration to her estate in order to comply with the sect. before he could give a valid receipt for the sum assured (FARWELL, L.J.).—GRIFFITHS v. FLEMING, [1909] 1 K. B. 805; 78 L. J. K. B. 567; 100 L. T. 765; 25 T. L. R. 377; 53 Sol. Jo. 340, C. A.

1225. —— Policy with trust for wife & children—Option to convert or substitute at stated date—Assignment for benefit of creditors—Objects of trust entitled to benefit of option.]—By a policy effected by a husband on his own life, the insurance co. contracted to pay to E., the wife of the insured, for her sole use, if then living, &, if not living, to the children of the insured or their trustee for their use, or if there should be no such children surviving, then to the exors., administrators, or assigns of the assured, the sum of £1,000. On the back of the policy were various conditions, from which it appeared that the policy was issued on the semi-tontine plan; that the tontine dividend period expired on June 20, 1910; that no dividend was to be allowed unless the insured survived the completion of that period & the policy should be then in force; that the surplus or profits derived from semi-tontine policies not in force when their respective tontine dividend periods expired were to be apportioned among such as completed their periods; & that on June 20, 1910, the insured in question, if the policy was then in force, would have the option of (a) withdrawing in cash the policy's entire share of the assets; (b) of converting the same into a paid-up policy for an equivalent amount; (c) of withdrawing in cash the share of accumulated

A. died, survived by his wife, & leaving a trust-disposition & settlement by which he made provisions in his wife's favour to be accepted by her "as in full satisfaction of all jus relictæ, terce or other claim of any kind competent to her through my decease":—Held: the wife was the primary creditor under the policy of insurance; the sum due under the policy did not form part of A.'s estate at his death, & the widow was entitled to the sum in the policy as well as the provision in her favour.—HAY'S TRUSTS v. HAY (1904), 6 F. surplus & continuing the policy on the ordinary plan; or (d) of continuing the assurance for the original amount & applying the entire dividend to the purchase of an annuity payable together with the annual dividends in cash to insured or his assigns. Insured's wife died before the completion of the dividend period, leaving one daughter. In 1905 insured assigned his property to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors, & the terms of the assignment were wide enough to include the policy if capable of assignment. On the expiration of the dividend period insured was still alive, & the trustee for his creditors claimed the right to exercise the first option & of receiving the entire assets for the creditors:—Held: (1) the options under the policy could only be exercised for the benefit of the persons for whom the trust was created; (2) so long as any objects of the trust remained unperformed the trusts could not be defeated; (3) the options must be exercised in the best manner for the benefit of those entitled, & (4) the proper course was for the insurance co. to issue a paid-up policy within the meaning of option (b) for the benefit of the child or children surviving the insured, & if there should be none the benefit of it would fall into his estate.—Re EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF UNITED STATES POLICY & MITCHELL (1911), 27 T. 1226. —— Policy for wife's benefit—Husband murdered by wife—Right of husband's executors to recover—Failure of trust for wife.]—The exors. of a person who has effected an insurance on his life for the benefit of his wife can maintain an action on the policy notwithstanding that his death was caused by a felonious act of his wife. The trust created by the policy in favour of the wife under sect. 11 of above Act, having become incapable of performance by reason of her crime, the insurance money becomes part of the estate of the assured, & as between his legal representatives & the insurers no question of public policy arises to afford a defence to the action.—CLEAVER v. MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCN., [1892] 1 Q. 1228. —— "On his own life"—Endowment policy for benefit of wife.]—A husband effected a life or twenty years' endowment policy with an insurance society, the money being payable on his death or on his surviving the twenty years. The policy was expressed to be for the benefit of his wife if he died within the twenty years leaving her surviving, otherwise for the benefit of himself or his estate. The husband died within the twenty years leaving his wife surviving:—Held: (1) the policy though immediately payable if the husband survived the twenty years was a policy effected "on his own life" within sect. 11 of above Act; (2) in the event that had actually occurred a valid trust for the wife was created within that sect.—Re IOAKIMIDIS' POLICY TRUSTS, IOAKIMIDIS v. HARTCUP, [1925] Ch. 403; 133 L. 1235. Policy on own life by husband—Assignment for benefit of wife & children—Rights of creditors on husband's bankruptcy.]—The payment of a premium on a life policy is not to be regarded as securing a certain part of the money assured by the policy. The whole of the premiums are paid to keep up the policy, & no proportionate part of the money payable under it is represented by the payment of any particular premium. Consequently, where the owner of a policy on his life by a post-nuptial settlement in 1877 assigned it to trustees for his wife & children, & he himself continued to pay the premiums voluntarily, being under no covenant with the trustees to do so, & in 1899 became bkpt. & died: —Held: no part of the payments of premiums during the ten years preceding the bkpcy. was a "settlement" within Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (c. 52), s. 47, so as to entitle the trustee in bkpcy. to any proportionate part of the policy moneys. —Re HARRISON & INGRAM, Ex p. WHINNEY, [1900] 2 Q. SUB-SECT. 3.—EQUITY OF EXONERATION.

A. When Arising.

1236. General rule.]—(1) The question whether a married woman who charges her property with money for the purpose of paying her husband's debts is entitled to have her property indemnified by him against the charge is a matter of inference to be drawn from the circumstances of each particular case, & where it appears that the debts, though legally the debts of the husband, were contracted to pay the expenses of the extravagant mode of living of both the wife & the husband, no inference of a right to indemnify will be drawn in her favour.

This doctrine applies in a case where the charge is made by the order of the ct. under sect. 39 of Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41); & the silence of such an order as to the wife's right to indemnify is not necessarily fatal to her right, though it is one of the circumstances to be taken into consideration.

(2) In cases where orders have been made under sect. 39 of the Act, it is the order of the ct. which binds the estate of the wife, & not what she does when the restraint on anticipation is removed.

(3) Costs of resps. on an unsuccessful appeal by a married woman, pltf. in the action, ordered to be paid out of property of hers, subject to a restraint on anticipation under Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (c. 63), s. 2.—PAGET v. PAGET, [1898] 1 Ch. 470; 67 L. The husband married again, & granted an assignation of the same policy in indentical terms in favour of his second wife. The second wife survived him:—Held: in the absence of evidence that the assignation in favour of the first wife was an onerous transaction, it must be presumed that it was intended merely as a provision for her in the event of her survivance, & as she had not survived, the proceeds of the policy did not form part of her estate; & claim for the second wife sustained.—PIRIE v. PIRIE, [1921] S. A Scotswoman was married, according to the law of Scotland, to X., whose domicil of origin was English. The husband & wife then joined in executing two Scottish instruments, purporting to charge the wife's reversionary interest in her Scottish realty with the payment of a debt due from the husband to a Scottish creditor. The wife was divorced by the law of Scotland, on the ground of her adultery; after which she was married to Y., a domiciled Englishman. The wife's reversionary interest fell into possession; & she & her second husband then filed a bill in this ct. against X., who was residing out of its jurisdiction, but who appeared to the suit, praying a decree for the payment of the debt, or for the exoneration by him of the wife's Scottish realty therefrom:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to the relief which they sought.—DRUMMOND v. DRUMMOND (1868), 37 L. 1249. —— Part proceeds for husband's benefit—Recoupment pro tanto.]—There are many cases in equity where, money having been borrowed on the security of the wife's estates, for the discharge of the husband's debt, relief has been given & the wife's estate exonerated, at least until the husband's debt has been exhausted . . . & the rule appears to have been applied where the money borrowed was in part only for the discharge of the husband's debt, & in part for that of the wife's, contracted before marriage. There the wife's estate will be exonerated in part; for that part she will be considered to have been his creditor; & for the remainder her estate will be liable. The same principle seems clearly applicable in the converse case, where the object of the proceeding is to charge the personal estate of the husband, primarily, & exoneration is sought for that, by throwing the primary charge upon the wife's estate, on the ground of the covenant having been only for a discharge of her debt (COLERIDGE, J.).—GEE v. SMART (1857), 8 E. & B. 313; 26 L. 1254. Exercise of joint power of appointment—By way of mortgage for husband's benefit—Wife entitled to moiety in default—No equity raised.]—(1) By a post-nuptial settlement in 1832, three estates, the property of the husband, were limited to the husband for life, remainder to such uses as husband & wife should jointly appoint for the purpose of raising money by way of mtge. or otherwise, & in default of such appointment to a trustee for a term of years upon trust to raise sums not exceeding £600, to pay debts of the husband, remainder to the wife for life, remainder as to one moiety to the husband in fee, & as to the other moiety to such uses as the wife should appoint, & subject thereto to herself in fee. In 1835 the joint power of appointment was exercised to raise two sums of £600 & £400 to pay debts of the husband:—Held: the wife's moiety was not entitled to be indemnified to the extent of these sums out of the husband's moiety; the property being absolutely in the hands of a mtgee. in priority to these limitations, & not having been conveyed by the wife, but having been appointed merely in exercise of a joint power: & the wife's estate having been expressly limited to her in default of execution of the power.

(2) Three estates, when put into settlement, were subject two of them to two mtgees. amounting to £2,400, & the third to a third for £3,000. The husband being tenant for life, became insolvent in 1841. In 1840 a judgment was recovered against him & duly registered. From 1841, the interest on the £3,000 fell into arrear, whilst the mtgees. of the £2,400 entered & received rents in excess of interest:—Held: the tenant for life was not entitled to have the benefit of the excess on the one estate until he had kept down the interest on the other.

(3) But, inasmuch as, when the judgment was recovered, no sum had been paid by the tenant for life in discharge of principal, & he had become insolvent before any part of the profits received by the mtgees. could be applied in part payment of the principal, the judgment creditor was held to be subject to the same equities as affected the tenant for life; & the appointee of the wife's moiety was held entitled to have the arrears during the life of the tenant for life set off against the accumulations before the judgment creditor was entitled to stand as an incumbrancer against the wife's moiety. It being alleged by the judgment creditor that no loss to the wife's estate was sustained by letting the interest fall into arrear, the principal & arrears of interest being more than the value of the estate an inquiry was directed.—SCHOLEFIELD v. LOCKWOOD (1863), 4 De G. Equity against mortgagee—Mortgage of reversionary interest—Trust to pay husband's debt—Right to surplus.]—A., a married woman, who was entitled, for her separate use, to a reversionary interest in personalty, joined with her husband in assigning same to trustees for a banking co., upon trust to receive same, & thereout in the first place to pay costs, & then to retain & pay to the co. the moneys due from the husband. The husband also assigned a policy of assurance upon his wife's life, to be held on same trusts. There was no proviso for redemption or power of sale in the deed; but the husband covenanted to pay the moneys secured. At the instance of the co., the usual foreclosure decree was made; but the Lord Chancellor, considering that the wife was in the position of a surety, reversed this, as the co. could have no claim against her reversionary interest beyond what the trusts of the deed prescribed; viz., to retain, out of the reversionary interest when it fell in, the moneys secured. —STAMFORD, SPALDING & BOSTON BANKING CO. v. BALL (1862), 4 De G. 1256. Release of dower to facilitate mortgage—Insufficient to raise equity.]—A wife married before Dower Act, 1833 (c. 105), joined, for the purpose of releasing her dower, with her husband in mortgaging his freehold estate, to secure his debt. By the mtge. deed the equity of redemption was reserved to the husband:—Held: (1) the wife's right to dower was extinguished in equity as well as at law, & she had no right to redeem the estate. (2) as she had pledged no estate recognised by a ct. of equity, & had undertaken no personal liability on behalf of her husband, she had no right in the character of a surety for his debt to have the value of her dower made good after his death out of the surplus proceeds of sale of the property which had been during his life sold by the mtgee. under a power of sale contained in the mtge deed.—DAWSON v. BANK OF WHITEHAVEN (1877), 6 Ch. 1257. —— ——.]—The owner in fee of certain lands died intestate, leaving a widow entitled to dower thereout. The heir-at-law executed a mtge. of the lands to secure a sum of money advanced to him by a building society. The widow was a party to the mtge. deed, by which, "for the purpose of extinguishing her right to dower," she granted & released the lands to the mtgees., the trustees of the building society. It was provided by the deed that, upon repayment of the money secured thereby, a receipt should be endorsed thereon on the form given by 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, to the intent that the deed should be vacated & the property comprised therein be revested in the person or persons for the time being interested in the equity of redemption therein. The moneys secured by the deed having been repaid, & the statutory receipt indorsed thereon:—Held: the widow was, notwithstanding. the release of her dower contained in the mtge. deed, entitled to have dower assigned to her out of the premises comprised in the deed.—MEEK v. CHAMBERLAIN (1881), 8 Q. 1258. —— Mortgage of settled estate—Charged for wife's jointure.]—The owner of certain estates, part of which were settled & part of which were unsettled, mortgaged them. His wife, who had a charge upon the settled estates for her jointure, joined in the mtge. The mtgor., with the concurrence of the mtgees., sold a portion of the unsettled estates, & part of the purchase money was paid to the mtgees. in reduction of the mtge. debt, & the balance was paid to the mtgor. The wife claimed as against the mtgees. that the balance should have been paid to her to recoup her for anything which was thrown on the settled estates:—Held: whatever equity she might have against her husband, the mtgor., she had none against the mtgees.—NOYES v. POLLOCK (1886), 32 Ch. The husband became entitled to be tenant by the curtsey; after the marriage, a sum of £2,500 for paying debts of the wife due prior to the marriage, was raised by mtge. of the estates, the husband joining & covenanting for payment of the mtge. money; & a further sum of £4,500 was raised on a like security; & afterwards a sum of £1,000 for paying interest on the former sums; the wife died without issue surviving her, having by her will devised the estates to her husband for life, with a limitation of them after his decease, "subject to such incumbrances as they were then subject to:" on a bill by the husband, an inquiry was directed into the application of the money raised, & the husband was held discharged from so much as was applied to the wife's use, except that as tenant for life he ought to keep down the interest; but the will of the wife was construed not to charge the estates with the whole sum, in exoneration of the husband.—KINNOUL (EARL) v. MONEY (1767), 3 Swan. 202; cited in 1 Ves. at p. 186; 36 E. A. joined with her husband in a mtge. of this estate to secure an advance made to him, & which, by the deed, he covenanted to repay. The re-conveyance was, by the terms of the deed, to be made to the husband in fee; & in the event of a sale by the mtgees. the surplus, if any, was to be paid to him, his exors., etc., for his & their own use & benefit. By an agreement executed a month afterwards, but which it was sworn was entered into at the time of, & was the inducement to A. to execute the mtge. deed, it was agreed that, as between A. & her husband, his estate was to be primarily liable to the payment of the mtge. debt, interest & costs, & that, in the event of a sale by the mtgees., the surplus if any, should be paid to her. Upon the bkpcy. of the husband the estate was sold, with the concurrence of the assignees, but failed to realise sufficient to satisfy the mortgagees:—Held: having parted with her estate to her husband by executing the mtge. deed, it became his, & consequently, she was not entitled to be recouped out of the assets the value of such estate as against the creditors of the husband.—Re SMALLPEICE, Ex p. SMALLPEICE (1857), 30 L. Mtges. for the husband's benefit for sums amounting altogether to £5,250 were made in exercise of the joint power of appointment, & the husband afterwards made a general assignment of all his estate on trust for his creditors:—Held: the mtges. being substantially of the wife's estate, the wife's claim as surety to the extent of the mtges. was prior to the claim of the creditors' trustees, who were directed to convey the premises to a purchaser, it appearing upon the mutual admissions of counsel on both sides that the mtges. exhausted the amount of the purchase money.—Re TRUEMAN, Ex p. TRUEMAN (1872), 42 L. 1281. —— —— ——.]—N. being entitled to certain lands as issue in tail, conveyed them in 1749 by lease & release to a mtgee. in fee to secure £800 borrowed, & levied a fine of the lands pursuant to covenant for the purpose of perfecting the security. In 1762 N. borrowed £450 & charged it upon the same lands by deed poll. N. died in 1764, leaving the charge upon the lands of the aggregate sum of £1,250, with an arrear of interest, & he by his will devised all his lands to M. his wife. In 1766, M. having married A. B., they by lease & release reciting the mtge., & that A. B. had paid the interest, granted & confirmed the mtged. lands to the mtgee., reserving the equity of redemption to A. B. his heirs, etc. By a deed in 1789, £300 an arrear of interest, was added to the principal, & the aggregate sum of £1,550 was charged on the lands, subject to redemption as by the former deed. M. died in 1794, leaving R. H., a son by the first husband, her heir-at-law. In 1797 A. B. sold part of the mtged. lands, & in consideration of £2,000 principal & interest, paid to the mtgee., & £600 paid to A. B. he & the mtgee. conveyed such part of the lands to R. R., the purchaser. The rest of the lands was conveyed by the mtgee. to A. B. who died in 1799. Under these circumstances the heir-at-law of M. filed a bill in the Exch. to redeem the lands, & the ct. decreed that he was entitled to redeem on payment of the principal money due upon the mtge., & interest calculated from the death of A. B. Upon appeal to the House of Lords the decree was affirmed, the House being of opinion that the representative of the husband was not entitled, as against the heir of the wife, to an allowance of interest actually paid by the husband during the life of his wife.—RUSCOMBE v. HARE (1828), 2 Bli. 1282. Lands in settlement—Instrument effective as charge only—Notwithstanding equity reserved to either party.]—Where lands are in settlement, & the husband & wife join in a mtge. of them, if the deed creating the security is no more in effect than a simple charge upon the lands, & does not alter the limitations further than is necessary to create the charge, the right of redemption, although it be reserved by the deed to the husband & wife, or either of them, their or either of their heirs, etc., belongs only to those who are entitled under the settlement, & not to the heirs of the husband, if he survive the wife.

But where the lands of A. upon her marriage were settled to the use of husband & wife successively for life, remainder in strict settlement, remainder to the wife & her heirs, with a power of revocation & appointment of new uses; & she joined with her husband in a mtge., & by the deed to lead the uses of a fine which the husband & wife afterwards levied, according to covenant, the lands after the determination of the term, created to secure the repayment of the money borrowed, were limited to the husband & wife, & survivor for life, remainder in tail special; remainder, for default of such issue, to the right heirs of the survivor of husband & wife: The wife having died, without issue, leaving the husband survivor:—Held: this was more than a mere mtge. transaction; there was evidence of an intention to effect a change of the beneficial interest; & there was upon the face of the deed a clear manifestation of such intention, equivalent to a declaration; & consequently the husband & his heirs, & not the heirs of the wife, were entitled to the equity of redemption.—JACKSON v. INNES (1819), 1 Bli. 104; 4 E. value of annuities, secured to the separate use of his wife, as a debt under the bkpcy. of the grantors, his assets were charged with the dividends only, upon the foot of that transaction, not with the annuities, as subsisting. A claim by testator's widow to dividends, to which he was entitled under a bkpcy., as a gift by him to her separate use, failed; the evidence not even affording a sufficient ground for directing an issue.

Nothing less would do than a clear irrevocable gift either to some person as a trustee, or by some clear & distinct act of his, by which he divested himself of his property, & engaged to hold it as a trustee for the separate use of his wife. If I were to admit declarations of intention or of disposition of his property to the use of his family, I should let in a sort of evidence, & upon a principle, that would have a most extensive effect (per CUR.). —M'LEAN v. LONGLANDS (1799), 5 Ves. 71; 31 E. 1285. -.]—A gift may be made by a husband to his wife, which, though bad in law, will be supported in equity. Though the property does not pass at law, yet, in equity, a husband, being the legal owner, may become a trustee for his wife, & if by clear & irrevocable acts he has made himself a trustee, the gift to his wife will be conclusive.

To constitute a gift between husband & wife, there must either be a clear irrevocable gift to a trustee for the wife, or some clear & distinct act of the husband, by which he divested himself of his property, & engaged to hold it as a trustee for the separate use of his wife. If a man were to deposit money with bankers, directing them to hold it for his wife, that would probably be sufficient. A farmer's wife, with his knowledge & sanction, deposited the produce of the surplus butter, eggs, & poultry with a firm in her own name, & he called it "her money," On his deathbed he gave his exor. directions to remove the money, & to do the best he could with it for his wife:—Held: the evidence was not sufficient to establish a gift between them, & the hüsband had neither made the firm nor himself trustees for his wife. —MEWS v. MEWS (1852), 15 Beav. 529; 51 E. 1287. Necessity for acceptance.] — By the marriage settlement of A. & B. it was provided among other things that, out of Bank of Ireland Stock, belonging to B., the wife, an amount equal to £10,000 should be transferred into their joint names in trust for B. for her sole & separate use. A. & B. lived together during the marriage from 1874 to 1887, when A., the husband, died, & the income of the £10,000 was received by A. The capital was realised by A. in his lifetime & applied to his own use. The evidence showed that B. wished to give the £10,000 to A., but he refused it & always spoke of the sum as B.'s £10,000. In 1888 B. made an affidavit verifying a schedule of A.'s debts, & stated that he had no other debts. The schedule did not include the £10,000. B. had no independent advice. By his will, made on Nov. 3, 1884, A. gave a legacy of £10,000 to B. together with the use during her life of all the property of which he should be possessed at the date of his death. Then he gave a series of legacies. B. took out a summons to determine certain points under the will, & claimed to prove as a creditor against the estate for £10,000, being moneys belonging to her for her separate use:—Held: there was no evidence of acceptance by A. of the gift from B. & the evidence was not sufficiently cogent to destroy the trust; therefore B. was entitled to rank as creditor against A.'s estate for £10,000 with interest at 4 per cent. since his death.—Re BLAKE, BLAKE v. POWER (1889), 60 L. 1321. Presumption of advancement.]—A. purchases a walk in a chase, & takes the patent to himself & to his wife & J. S. during their lives, & the life of the survivor; the husband dies indebted.

This is an advancement to the wife, who was entitled to the benefit of the patent during her life, though A. had not left assets to pay his debts, but after her death, J. S. to be a trustee for the exor.—KINGDON v. BRIDGES (1688), 2 Vern. 67; 23 E. R. 653.

1323. —— Marriage must be valid.]—H. married, in 1840, R., the sister of a deceased wife. He afterwards invested parts of the savings of his income in a sum of Consols in their joint names. It did nor appear that R., the reputed wife, had at the time of performing the ceremony of marriage any property of her own. In 1845 H. died, leaving his reputed wife surviving:—Held: she was a trustee of the stock, & it formed part of the estate of H.

No intention of advancement in cases of a purchase in joint names will be presumed, except in the case of a lawful wife, or a person to whom the purchaser stands in loco parentis.

In all other cases the onus of proving the intention to advance is thrown on the person claiming the advancement, & such a circumstance as the performance of the ceremony of marriage, where the parties knew it to be inoperative, will not be regarded.—SOAR v. FOSTER (1858), 4 K. & J. 152; 31 L. 1324. Right of wife as survivor—Subsequent mortgage by husband—Equity of redemption in husband or wife.]—Husband after marriage purchases a term to himself & wife, & the survivor & the exors., administrators & assigns of such survivor; husband assigns the term in mtge., proviso to be void on payment of the money by him or wife, or the exors. of him or wife. Proviso that the husband, his exors. or administrators shall till default of payment quietly enjoy. Husband after seven years, contracts debts & dies. Decreed that this settlement of the term being after marriage, in the power of the husband, & the equity of redemption being reserved to him as well as to his wife, & being also in the case of creditors, was assets to pay debts.—WATTS v. THOMAS (1726), 2 P. Wms. 364; 24 E. R. 767.

1325. —— Other assets insufficient for legacies.]—A husband, before making his will, transferred two sums of 4 per cent. & 5 per cent. stock, then forming the whole of his funded property, into the joint names of himself & his wife. By his will he gave the rents of his leasehold houses & the interest of all his funded property or estate of whatsoever kind, upon trust for his wife for life, &, after her decease, upon trusts to pay divers legacies of 4 per cent. stock, the aggregate amount of which fell short by £50 only of the amount of stock of that description, so formerly transferred by him. He afterwards made some further purchases of 5 per cent. stock, taking the transfers in the joint names of himself & his wife, & died in her lifetime, leaving no funded property except the 4 per cents. & 5 per cents before mentioned; exclusive of which, his assets were wholly insufficient to pay his legacies:—Held: all the sums of stock then standing in the joint names of the husband & wife, & whether transferred before or after the date of his will, became, by survivorship, the absolute property of the wife.—DUMMER v. PITCHER, PITCHER v. DUMMER (1833), Coop. temp. Brough. 257; 2 My. & K. 262; 39 E. 1326. —— Attempted disposition by husband's will—Wife put to her election.]—Testator bequeathed £2,200 stock, his property, standing in the joint names of himself & wife, to trustees, upon trust to pay the interest & dividends to his wife for her life, &, after her decease, to distribute the capital amongst his grandchildren by name; & he directed that in case he had not that sum standing in his name at the time of his death, the same should be made up out of his other estate & effects:—Held: the stock was the absolute property of the wife surviving, & she must elect between this & the other benefits bequeathed to her by testator's will.—COATES v. STEVENS (1834), 1 Y. & C. Applt. sued resp. in Burma for a declaration that she held the houses as his benamidar & for an order that they be conveyed to him:—Held: the rights of the parties were to be determined according to the law applied by the Ct. of Ch. in England, whereby resp. being applt.'s wife, there was a rebuttable presumption that the transaction was intended for her advancement; but applt. had discharged the onus upon him, since he had established with reasonable clearness that he had other specific motives for his action.—KERWICK v. KERWICK (1920), L. Sect. 9.—Gifts between husband and wife: Sub-sect. 2, A. (b), (c) & (d).]

£3,000 gave all the residue of his estate & effects, "including therein the money in my banking account in the Bank of England, & money in the public funds, & whether standing in my name alone, or jointly with my said wife," & all his shares & interest in any public co., & other effects, to his wife for her life, & after her decease to other persons.

At the date of the will, & at the time of the testator's death, there was only one sum, viz. £7,110 Consols standing in the joint names of himself & his wife.

This stock had by a previous will been bequeathed to the wife, subject to two executory gifts over, which did not take effect, one in favour of her children, if any, & the other of her husband, if he survived. The stock had been received by testator, & by him transferred into their joint names.

After testator's death his wife received the income of all the residuary estate, including the £7,110 Consols, but made no attempt to deal with the stock as her own property. There was, however, no evidence to show that she knew what her rights were. She subsequently died, & her representatives claimed the stock.

The question was, whether they were bound, under the doctrine of election, to compensate the residuary legatees, who would be disappointed by their taking the stock, to any & what extent: —Held: testator intended the stock to pass, & was not dealing only with his right of survivorship; he affected to give property belonging to his wife, & consequently the doctrine of election applied both to the wife & her representatives claiming under her; & her representatives could only take the stock upon the terms of compensating the disappointed residuary legatees to the extent of the legacy of £3,000, & of the amount actually received by the wife in respect of her life interest in testator's own property.—Re CARPENTER, CARPENTER v. DISNEY (1884), 51 L. 1328. —— Husband dying before transaction completed—Transfer of stock.]—A. B. gave directions to his bankers to invest a sum of money in the joint names of himself & wife, & their brokers accordingly made the purchase. A. B. died after the contract, but before the transfer had been completed:—Held: the wife was entitled to the stock by survivorship.—VANCE v. VANCE (1839), 1 Beav. 605; 48 E. R. 1076.

1329. Purchase money unpaid.] An agreement for the purchase of land was entered into in the names of husband & wife, & the husband died before the whole of the purchase-money had been paid. (2) Testator directed his widow "to be in possession of all his furniture, plate, glass & books, & for the time of her natural life, to receive the yearly interest & profits of all his property that he was in possession of at his death":—Held: the widow took a life interest only in the furniture, etc.—LOW v. CARTER (1839), 1 Beav. 426; 48 E. He also transferred certain railway stock into the names of himself & his wife & two strangers, who were both trustees of the settlement:—Held: the two investments were neither intended as an augmentation of the settlement fund, nor were they to form part of his residuary estate, but were advancements for the benefit of the wife; & the strangers in each case were trustees for her upon her surviving her husband.—Re EYKYN'S TRUSTS (1877), 6 Ch. Subsequently, under the authority of a power of attorney given to her by the husband, she sold a portion of the stock & kept the money in her custody, & it so remained at the husband's death: —Held: the stock remaining in the joint names of the husband & wife survived to her, but there being no evidence of an intention on the part of the husband to make an absolute gift to the wife, that the proceeds of sale of the stock formed part of the husband's general assets.—Re GADBURY (1863), 32 L. 1336. —— —— To facilitate management.] The husband of pltf. being in failing health transferred his banking account from his own name into the joint names of himself & his wife, & directed the bankers to honour cheques drawn either by himself or his wife; & he afterwards paid in considerable sums to this account. All cheques were afterwards drawn by pltf. at the direction of her husband, & the proceeds were applied in payment of household & other expenses. The husband never explained to pltf. what his intention was in transferring the account, but he was stated by the bank manager to have remarked at the time of the transfer that the balance of the account would belong to the survivor of himself & his wife. After the death of her husband, which took place a few months after the transfer, pltf. claimed to be entitled to the balance:—

Held : the transfer of the account was not intended to be a provision for pltf., but merely a mode of conveniently managing her husband's affairs ; & consequently she was not entitled.—MARSHAL v. CRUTWELL (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 328 ; 44 L. J Ch. 504 ; 39 J. P. 775.

1338. —— —— Wife ignorant of account.]—A husband, in 1879, transferred the money standing to a current rent account at his bank in his own name into the joint names of himself & his wife. He did not inform his wife of the joint account, & always drew cheques on the account himself. He died in Nov. 1919. The wife never drew any cheque on the account until shortly before his death, when he was in failing health & unable to attend to business. The bank manager then informed her of the joint account, & advised her to draw a cheque, which she did. The husband had also from time to time made deposits in the joint names of himself & his wife, & in Aug. 1919, consolidated them into one deposit in the joint names. The wife never knew of this deposit until after her husband's death. There was then found among his papers an envelope endorsed with the wife's initials & containing the deposit receipt & a document in which he said : "I would like this paying away at once if possible as under," with a list of names with amounts against them : —Held : the moneys standing to the credit of both the current account & the deposit account belonged to the wife as survivor, & the document did not raise any presumption that the husband regarded the deposit as his own property.—Re HARRISON, DAY v. HARRISON (1920), 90 L. 1339. —— Not defeated by declaration of nullity.]—In 1896, pltf., then Miss W., was married to deft. In 1897 deft. bought a house for £654, which was conveyed to him & his wife as joint tenants. Deft. paid £354 out of his own money & borrowed the remaining £300, on the security of a mtge. of the house. This mtge. was executed by both husband & wife & was in the ordinary form of a mtge. by joint tenants. In 1898 pltf. & deft. separated. In 1905 deft. paid off the £300 mtge. debt & the house was reconveyed to him & pltf. In 1907 pltf. instituted proceedings for a declaration of nullity of marriage & in October, 1908, a decree absolute was made whereby the marriage was declared "to have been & to be absolutely null & void." Pltf. brought this action for a declaration that she was entitled to the house as joint tenant in fee with her late husband :—Held : (1) at the date of the purchase the husband intended the house to be an advancement for his wife ; (2) there was no implied condition that the marriage should continue ; & pltf. was entitled to the declaration she claimed.—DUNBAR v. DUNBAR, [1909] 2 Ch. 639 ; 79 L. A. died, leaving his wife surviving him :—Held : the debt belonged to the wife & did not form part of testator's general personal estate.—GOSLING v. GOSLING (1855), 3 Drew. 335 ; 61 E. R. 931.

1342. —— No evidence as to who provided money.]—In the case of a transfer of mtge. to a husband & his wife after Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), the money was stated to have been advanced by them on a joint account, but there was no evidence as to how it was found :—Held : even assuming that the husband advanced part out of his money & the wife part out of hers, the case was the same as if the whole of the money were an advance by the husband, & the wife surviving him, her estate was entitled to the money paid off.—Re SCOTT, Re SCOTT, PALMER v. VICKERS (1907), 97 L. There was clear evidence that half of the respective loans belonged to the separate estate of the wife. The mtge. interest was during the husband's life collected & paid to him, & he paid a half of the sums so received to her. The husband died leaving his wife surviving :—Held : the presumption in favour of advancement was not rebutted, & the widow was entitled to the mtges. by survivorship :—Re HICKS, HICKS v. HICKS (1917), 117 L. 1351. Deed of gift of furniture—Remaining in husband's house—Not in reputed ownership.]—Judgment creditors, who had levied execution at the judgment debtor's house, were met by a claim on behalf of the debtor's wife that the goods, on which execution was proposed to be levied, belonged to her under a post-nuptial deed of gift, executed by the debtor in her favour for natural love & affection. The deed was not registered under the Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (c. 31), & the goods conveyed by the deed remained in debtor's house in which he & his wife continued to live together after the execution of the deed, as they were doing when the deed was executed: —Held: the deed was not invalid under Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 10, as there was no evidence that the furniture after the gift remained in the order & disposition or reputed ownership of the husband, & the judgment creditors were not entitled to levy execution on the goods.—FRENCH v. GETHING, [1922] 1 K. 1352. Gift impeachable by creditors—Surrender of life interest in settlement—Post-nuptial deed.]—By an ante-nuptial settlement made in 1900 debtor settled investments in certain railway & other stocks upon trust (inter alia) for bkpt. for life. In 1913 arrangements were made by debtor which resulted in the income from the investments comprised in the marriage settlement being thenceforward paid to the wife. In Mar. 1914, debtor & his wife agreed to separate, & in order to insure to the wife the continued payment of the income, debtor in Mar. 1915, executed a post-nuptial deed under which debtor's life interest under the marriage settlement was surrendered to the wife, & she was given a power of appointment which might act in derogation of debtor's ultimate reversion to the property. There was no agreement by the wife that she would not take proceedings against debtor for maintenance. In July, 1917, debtor committed an act of bkpcy., & in Jan. 1918, an order of adjudication was made against him. It was not proved that at the time of executing the deed of Mar. 1915, debtor was able to pay all his debts without the aid of the property comprised in it:—Held: upon the facts the true inference to be drawn was that the wife was not a purchaser for valuable consideration within Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 42 (1), & that instead of a voluntary allowance to his wife the debtor substituted a voluntary settlement; & as in these circumstances there was no consideration given for it, the deed of Mar. 1915, was void so far as was necessary for the payment of the debts owing by debtor & the costs of the bkpcy.—Re MACDONALD, Ex p. MCCULLUM, [1920] 1 K. 1353. Definition of pin money—Not ordinary debt.]—If [pin money] is not an ordinary debt: it is not a gift from the husband to the wife out & out . . . it is meant for the wife's expenditure on her person, it is to meet her personal expenses & to deck her person suitably to her husband's dignity (LORD LYNDHURST, C.).—HOWARD v. DIGBY (EARL) (1834), 2 Cl. & Fin. 634: 8 Bli. N. S. 224; 5 Sim. 330; 6 E. R.

1357. Effect of wife's misconduct—Elopement & adultery.]—If a lady has pin-money secured by a term, & runs away & lives in adultery, & the trustees proceed at law to recover the term, it seems they will be restrained; for pin-money was never designed to make women independent of their husbands, & support them in vice. But if she left him by ill usage, or other reasonable grounds, or the husband acquiesced in her departure, equity will not interpose.—MOORE v. SCARBOROUGH (1737), Coop. temp. Cott. 538; 47 E. 1360. —— Elopement without adultery.]—By marriage settlement in 1707 the husband conveyed lands to trustees for ninety-nine years if he should so long live in trust to pay £100 per annum for the separate use of the wife. Owing to disputes the wife in 1728 left her husband & went to live in France. In 1734, the annuity being in arrear the trustees brought ejectment. Later in the same year the husband sued in the ecclesiastical ct. for restitution of conjugal rights, & after sentence against his wife for non-appearance, brought his bill to restrain the ejectment action. By his bill he offers to receive his wife again & in that case to pay her the annuity:—Held: this being a case of mere elopement, without incontinency, & having regard to the continued payment of the annuity for some time afterwards, & the delay in instituting the suit in the ecclesiastical ct., the ct. of Ch. would not interfere with the legal rights of the trustees.—MOORE v. MOORE (1737), 1 Atk. 272; West temp. Hard. 35; 26 E. SUB-SECT. 3.—GIFTS BY WIFE.

A. Validity.

(a) In General.

1361. Undue influence—Presumption from relationship of parties.]—(1) There is no presumption that a voluntary deed executed by a wife in her husband's favour, & prepared by her husband's solicitor, is invalid.

(2) The onus probandi lies on the person who impugns the instrument & not on the person who supports it.—BARRON v. WILLIS, [1899] 2 Ch. 578; 68 L. J. Ch. 604; 81 L. T. 321; 48 W. R. 26; 15 T. L. 1362. —— —— Large benefit conferred.]—F., who was indebted to B., obtained from his wife, deft., a guarantee in favour of B. to cover his debts then due to B., a present advance of £500 & future credits, the total liability being limited to £1,500. Deft. was a trader on her own account, & had on previous occasions given F. small amounts of financial aid. Deft. was aware of F.'s financial position & of his indebtedness to B. B., B.'s solr., F., & deft. were the only persons present when the guarantee was signed, & deft. had no independent advice. The guarantee, a very complicated document, was twice read over by the solr., who suggested to B. that deft. should be separately represented:—Held: (1) deft. did not sufficiently understand the nature of the guarantee; (2) the relationship of husband & wife was one where in the case of a large voluntary benefit influence was presumed to exist; (3) the transaction being challenged the burden was on the donee to prove that the giving of the guarantee was free from the influence of the husband, &, in the absence of independent advice, this had not been discharged; (4) B. was sufficiently put on inquiry to be affected with the equitable flaws in the transaction.—BISCHOFF'S TRUSTEE v. FRANK

PART VI. SECT. 9, SUB-SECT. 2.—C.

1357 i. Effect of wife's misconduct—Elopement & adultery.]—Adultery by the wife, no bar to the specific performance of articles executed previous to marriage, providing a jointure for her. Jointure not forfeited at law by elopement or adultery; the same rule in equity where jointure secured by articles.—BUCHANAN v. BUCHANAN (1809), 1 Ball & B. 203.—IR.

PART VI. SECT. 9, SUB-SECT. 3.—A. (a).

1361 i. Undu influence—Presumption from relationship of parties.]—In the case of an absolute gift from wife to husband, the relationship does not of itself raise any presumption of undue influence.—ROBERTS v. BROWN & BEATTIE, [1924] N. Z. L. R. N.Z.

1363. Understanding transaction.] (1) Pltf. having obtained judgment against a debtor, it was agreed that the judgment debtor & the two defts. in the present action, who were husband & wife, should give pltf. a joint & several promissory note, payable by instalments, for the amount of the judgment. The husband, who had business relations with the judgment debtor, procured his wife's signature to the promissory note, the jury finding that the transaction was sufficiently explained to her & that she knew that the document she was signing was a promissory note, & that she also knew she was incurring a possible liability for the benefit of the judgment debtor in so signing; they also found that her signature was procured by the influence of her husband, but could not agree as to whether it was procured by his undue influence. Default having been made by the judgment debtor in payment of the instalments of the promissory note, the present action was brought against the husband & wife to recover the balance of the instalments of the promissory note. The husband allowed judgment to go by default:—Held: notwithstanding the absence of independent advice, the wife was liable upon the promissory note.

(2) There is no general rule of universal application that the rule of equity as to confidential relationships necessarily applies to the relation of husband & wife, so as to throw on the husband, or on the person who is suing the wife, the onus of disproving an issue of undue influence (LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., FLETCHER-MOULTON, L.J.).

(3) The relation of husband & wife does not come within the equity laid down in Huguenin v. Baseley, (1807), 14 Ves. 273.—HOWES v. BISHOP, [1909] 2 K. B. 390; 78 L. J. K. B. 796; 100 L. T. 826; 25 T. L. R. 533, C. A.

1364. Trustees dissenting—Where assent not required—Not evidence of coercion—Grant of annuity.]—Grant of an annuity by a married woman out of her separate property established; notwithstanding notice to pltf. by the trustees, that they would pay to herself only on account of complaints of her husband's conduct, in consequence of her refusing to join him in raising money; the transaction, though for the benefit of her husband, upon the evidence being her deliberate act, aware of what she was doing & a free agent.

A married woman can bind her separate property without the trustees; unless their assent is rendered necessary by the instrument giving her that property. Their dissent cannot have any effect, where their assent is not necessary; & their declaration that she was unwilling cannot be evidence of the fact that she parted with her property by coercion (GRANT, M.R.).—ESSEX v. ATKINS (1808), 14 Ves. 542; 33 E. R. 629.

Annotation:—Refd. Glyn v. Baster (1827), 1 Y. & J. 329.

1365. Instrument prepared by husband's solicitor—Not read over on execution—Executed unwillingly.]—By a will, the income of certain trust funds was given to a wife for her separate use, for life, with power for her by any will or instrument in writing, to be by her duly executed, to bequeath & dispose of one moiety of the trust funds. By an indenture, duly executed, she appointed the moiety to her husband absolutely. In a suit by her against her husband she sought to set aside the appointment, on the ground that she had executed it in ignorance of its contents & purport, & without professional advice; & it was in evidence that the deed was prepared by the husband's solr., & was executed by the wife at her husband's house, without its having been read over to her at that time; & that she was agitated & distressed at the time, & signed it in a reluctant manner:—Held: the appointment was not invalid; & it was sustained. An appointment made in exercise of a power by a wife in favour of her husband is to be considered good, unless the wife shows that it was executed in circumstances sufficient to invalidate it. The onus probandi lies on the party impeaching the instrument.—NEDBY v. NEDBY (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 377; 21 L. J. Ch. 446; 19 L. T. O. S. 294; 64 E. R. 1161.

1368. Wife not independently advised—Property charged to benefit husband — False recital.] — Money which had been bequeathed to a married woman for her separate use was, during the coverture, by her husband, at her request, lent on mtge. The mtge. deed was prepared by the solr. of the mtgor. from instructions given by him & the husband, & it recited untruly that the money belonged to the wife before marriage, & was not comprised in any settlement & it was made payable to the husband & wife, & to the survivor of them, his or her exors., or administrators, or their, his, or her assigns. The wife had no separate solr., & executed the deed without its being read over to her. The husband deserted his wife, & was subsequently, on her petition, divorced from her on the grounds of adultery & cruelty. Upon bill by the wife, by her next friend, against her husband, & the mtgor., the deed was declared to be void, so far as it purported to be a settlement on the husband of the £2,000, & a new deed was ordered to be executed in favour of the wife alone.—KNIGHT v. KNIGHT (1865), 5 Giff. 26; 12 L. T. 699; 11 Jur. N. S. 617; 66 E. R. 908.

1369. —— —— Concealment of material facts.] —Held: applts. could not enforce a charge on respt.'s share in her father's estate, obtained through their agent who was also exor. & trustee for her under her father's will, by pressure through her husband, whose debts were to be thereby secured, concealment of material facts, & without independent advice.—TURNBULL & CO. v. DUVAL, [1902] A. 1370. —— Guarantee for husband.]—BISCHOFF'S TRUSTEE v. FRANK, No. 1362, ante.

1371. —— —— Nature of transaction not explained.]—Pltfs., having agreed to supply goods to deft.'s husband on credit if his wife would guarantee payment by him of their price, sent to the husband a form of guarantee, in order that he might obtain his wife's signature to it, leaving the matter entirely to him. The husband obtained his wife's signature to the guarantee, without sufficiently explaining to her the nature of the document, which she did not understand when she signed it. Goods having been supplied by pltfs. to deft.'s husband, the price of which was not paid, pltfs. sued deft. on the guarantee:—Held: the action was not maintainable.—CHAPLIN & CO., LTD. v. BRAMMALL, [1908] 1 K. 1372. Knowledge of effect of transaction.]—H. wrote to his niece informing her of his intention "to request her acceptance of £10,000, to be settled as might be most agreeable to herself & her husband." No formal settlement was made of the money, which was paid in to an account which she had separately from her husband.

Subsequently she wrote to her bankers, at her husband's instance, requesting them to transfer the fund from her account to that of her husband; but she always received the interest. In her evidence she deposed that she thought she had a right to the income, but had no power to deal with the capital except by will:—Held: the money belonged to her for her separate use, & she had not abandoned her rights.

To enable a husband to claim separate estate against his wife, it must be clearly proved that the wife knew what her rights were, & intended to give them up.—CARNEGIE v. CARNEGIE (1874), 31 L. T. 7; 22 W. R. 783, L. JJ.

1373. 1374. —— Promissory note.]—To an action against a wife upon joint & several promissory notes of her husband & herself, signed by her as surety for the repayment of sums advanced by pltf. to her husband, deft. pleaded that she was induced to sign the notes by duress on the part of her husband, & that pltf. knew of that duress. At the trial evidence was given by deft. of the duress so alleged, & the jury found that there was such duress. No evidence, however, was given on deft.'s part to show that pltf. knew of the duress, but on the contrary she stated in evidence that she did not think that the pltf. knew of it. Pltf. was not called as a witness, &, consequently, did not give evidence to negative his knowledge of the duress:—Held: the onus of proof with regard to knowledge of the duress by pltf. lay upon deft. & was not shifted by Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (c. 61), s. 30, upon pltf., &, therefore, pltf. must succeed.—TALBOT v. VON BORIS, [1911] 1 K. 1378. ——.]—(1) In the case of transactions between husband & wife the burden of proving undue influence lies upon those who allege it, but it is not necessary in every case to show that the wife had independent advice.

Where a wife, who was possessed of large separate estate, gave a guarantee to a bank in order to help her husband & a co. in which he was largely interested, which was in pecuniary difficulties, alleging that she acted of her own free will, without any pressure having been put upon her, & that she would not have taken advice from anyone, but it appeared that she acted in passive obedience to her husband's directions, & would have signed anything that he asked her to sign & had no means of forming an independent judgment is she had desired to do so:—Held: the transaction could not stand.

1384. —— ——.]—Under a marriage settlement a wife was entitled to the income of the trust property for life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation. The settlement contained a power to the wife to appoint £10,000, & the trustees were empowered to invest in the purchase of lands. It appeared from the evidence that after the marriage the wife contemplated a gift of capital to her husband, & from the first she permitted her husband to receive the income of the whole trust property. In pursuance of the power in the settlement, the wife appointed that a sum of East India Stock, of the value of £10,000, should be transferred to her husband & herself, for his & her own absolute use & benefit. This sum of stock was sold by the husband at four different times; the wife joined in the transfers of the stock; the husband received the proceeds of sale, & applied them to his own purposes. The husband subsequently borrowed two sums of £8,000 & £5,696 from the trustees of the settlement, to enable him to make purchases of real property; these sums were secured by a deposit of title deeds. The husband also rebuilt a house on the property in settlement, with the consent of the trustees, & sought to have £2,000 in respect of such improvements allowed in account as against the sum of £8,000 due from him. In an action against the husband & the trustees, commenced by the wife & continued by her executors:—Held: (1) the husband was not accountable for the income of his wife's separate estate, which she permitted him to receive; (2) there was a gift to the husband of the £10,000, when it came into his hands without the exertion of undue influence over his wife; (3) the £2,000 expended in building could not be considered as sanctioned by the power to invest in land; & the two sums of £8,000 & £5,696 must be repaid, but without interest; (4) the exors. of the wife were not debarred from obtaining the restitution of the trust funds by the alleged acquiescence of the wife in the breaches of trust.—HALE v. SHELDRAKE (1889), 60 L. 1386. —— —.] — Where husband & wife are living together in amity, & the husband, with the wife's consent, receives her separate income, he is, in the absence of an agreement express or to be inferred from the circumstances, taken to receive it in his capacity as head of the family & is entitled to deal with it as he pleases & is not liable to account for it to his wife or to repay any part of it to her. It is a question of fact whether an agreement has been arrived at which rebuts the presumption arising from the receipt of the wife's money by the husband. A wife's separate income was, with her consent, received by her husband:—Held: on the evidence, the money was only paid to the husband for the purpose of investment, & it remained the wife's property.—Re YOUNG, YOUNG v. YOUNG (1913), 29 T. 1387. —— Term bequeathed to wife—No trustees appointed.]—Testator gave leasehold premises to his daughter for life, if his term or terms & interest therein should so long subsist, for her sole & separate use, notwithstanding her present or future coverture; & after her decease to her children equally, their exors., etc., during all the remainder of the estate, term or terms & interest therein, which should be then to come & unexpired. No trustees being interposed:—Held: the husband having possession was accountable according to the uses of the will, both as to the original leases, & also as to reversionary leases, granted to him, as the person entitled under the will of the former tenant, upon favourable terms; & the equity was established against a purchaser from him with notice.—PARKER v. BROOKE (1804), 9 Ves. 583; 32 E. The ct. proceeds, in such case, on the assumption that some arrangement has been made between the husband & wife; but in the case of the wife being a lunatic, evidence to the contrary, the ct. will assume that it is a gift; but this implied authority is withdrawn when the parties are at arm's length & from that time the husband must account for the income.—D'ALBEDYHLL v. D'ALBEDYHLL (1886), 5 N. Z. L. R. 24 (S. C.).—N.Z.

her acquiescence could not be presumed, the account was refused.

The rents were paid into a separate bank, distinct from the husband's usual bank, & were applied by him, partly in paying incumbrances on the property; but the greater portion was accumulated:—Held: the wife having permitted her husband to exercise entire control over the rents, an agreement by her must be presumed that the fund should be at his absolute disposal, & the accumulations at his death would form part of his personal estate.—BERESFORD v. ARMAGH (ARCHBP.) Some time afterwards he left her:—Held: though the wife might have been presumed to have assented to the husband's actual receipt of the dividends while the stock remained intact, yet no such assent could be presumed after it had been sold, & she was entitled to recover, as against her husband & the estate of the deceased trustee, the arrears of dividends which had accrued since that time, as well as to have the trust fund replaced.—DIXON v. DIXON (1878), 9 Ch. 1393. —— Interest on capital — Capital converted to own use.]—A married woman being entitled to a sum of money for her separate use under the will of a testatrix, a mtge. for a larger sum held in trust for testatrix was transferred in the year 1867 by the married woman & another person, as exors. of the trustee, to the husband of the married woman, he paying out of his own money to the exor. of testatrix the amount of the difference between the two sums. In 1869 the husband as mtgee. sold the mortgaged property, & his wife & the other exor. of the original mtgee. as such exors. concurred in the assignment to the purchaser, the execution of the assignment by the wife being procured by the husband. The husband received the purchase-money & applied it to his own use. The husband & wife lived together in amity until his death, & no proceedings were ever taken against him by her in respect of her money so received, nor did she receive any income thereof. There was no issue of the marriage. The husband died in 1885, having by his will, made in 1860, given his wife a life interest in his property. After his death she claimed to rank as a creditor against his estate for the sum received by him in 1867 with subsequent interest. She denied that she ever gave him any authority to receive the money, & there was some evidence that she objected to his receiving it. In the transactions in reference to the mtge. she did not appear to have had any separate advice:—Held: (1) those who claimed under the husband had not discharged the burden which lay upon them of proving a gift of the capital sum by the wife to the husband, & her claim in respect thereof must be allowed; (2) as to the interest accruing during the life of the husband the claim must be disallowed.—Re FLAMANK, WOOD v. COCK (1889), 40 Ch. 1395. —— Subsequently sole trustee.]—By the law of Scotland, as well as by that of England, a married woman may make an effectual gift of her separate income to her husband; with this difference, that by Scotch law she has the privilege of revoking the donation, even after her husband's death, & reclaiming the subject of her gift in so far as it has not been consumed. The same circumstances which are in England held to imply donations between husband & wife are sufficient to sustain a similar inference in Scotland. A married woman living with her husband in Scotland was entitled to the income of a fund settled for her separate use, which stood in the names of trustees of whom her husband was one; & he also acted as factor of the trust. that time the husband had never paid any interest on the mtge. debt, or given any written acknowledgment of the mtge. to the mtgee.-trustee for the wife:—Held: the husband retained the interest as a gift from the wife; it was the same hand to pay & to receive; therefore, no payment over was requisite; &, consequently, Stat. Limitations did not run, & the mtge. was still subsisting.—Re HAWES, Re BURCHELL, BURCHELL v. HAWES (1892), 62 L. J. Ch. 463; 67 L. T. 756; 41 W. R. 173; 3 R. 133.

1406. ·]—By a marriage settlement dated in 1847, a fund belonging to the wife was vested in trustees in trust for investment "on real or personal securities bearing interest," with power of varying investments with the written consent of the husband & wife or the survivor, & to pay the income to the wife for her separate use without power of anticipation, then to the husband for life, & after the death of the survivor, as to the capital, upon the trusts therein mentioned.

In 1852, the trustees, on the written consent of the wife, lent the trust fund in cash to the husband on the security of his bond in a penal sum, conditioned for repayment to the trustees of the sum advanced with interest at 4 per cent. per annum six months after date. The bond contained no stipulation in terms for payment of interest beyond the six months.

The husband & wife lived together in amity for more than twenty years after the date of the bond, the wife dying in 1876 & the husband in 1896. At his death the bond was found in his possession. He never, either during his wife's lifetime or afterwards, paid any interest on the bond or gave any written acknowledgment of his indebtedness under it:—Held: the bond debt was not barred by Stat. Limitations on the grounds that the bond, being a penalty bond, was an interest bearing security carrying interest, though not mentioned beyond the date fixed for payment of the debt; that as the husband & wife had lived together in amity it was unnecessary, in order to prevent the statute from running, to go through the formality of the husband paying the interest to the trustees, the trustees paying it to the wife, & the wife paying it to the husband; & that, as the husband took with full notice that the money lent was trust money & liable to investment on interest-bearing security, he was in the position of an express trustee.

In equity when a wife living in amity with her husband allows him to retain money which she might have insisted on having paid to her for her separate use, she is assumed to have given to him all arrears of income (RIGBY, L.J.).—Re DIXON, HEYNES v. DIXON, [1900] 2 Ch. 561; 69 L. 1409. —— —— Presumption of resulting trust.]—In 1883 deft. married M. They kept a joint banking account almost entirely composed of the wife's income, & both husband & wife drew on this account. In 1891 they bought some land, which was paid for out of the joint account & was conveyed to the husband. He died intestate in 1901, & his heir-at-law claimed the land:—Held: Mrs. M. had not made a gift of the purchase-money to her husband, & the land belonged to her.

There is no distinction in principle between the presumption of a resulting trust in favour of the wife which arises when her income has been applied to a purchase in her husband's name & that which arises when the payment has been made out of her capital.

In the case of the receipt by a husband of the separate property of his wife there is no general rule of law that in the case of corpus belonging to the wife the onus of proof of a gift lies on the husband, while in the case of income the onus lies on the wife, & she must establish clearly & conclusively that her husband received the income by way of loan. For this purpose the difference between capital & income is only one of degree & not of principle.—MERCIER v. MERCIER, [1903] 2 Ch. 98; 72 L. J. Ch. 511; 88 L. T. 516; 51 W. R. 611; 47 Sol. 1412. —— With wife's capital—Dividends paid to wife.]—A., the wife of B., was entitled in her own right to certain real estate, & proceedings to recover the same were instituted against C. who was in possession. The claim was compromised by C.'s paying a sum of money, & A.'s executing a release of the estate. The money was received by B. who, in a letter to the attorney in the proceedings, stated his intention to invest it for his wife's use. The sum was afterwards invested in B.'s name, & he regularly paid the dividends to his wife. B. on several occasions spoke of the stock as belonging to his wife, etc. B. died & upon the claim of A.:—Held: B. was a trustee of the fund for her separate use, & the exors. were ordered to transfer it to her.—TROTTER v. VINING (1852), 19 L. 1413. —— —— Without wife's knowledge.]—The wife's separate estate was invested in shares, in the joint names of herself & her husband. The husband induced his wife to join in selling them, upon his promise to reinvest the produce in their joint names. The husband alone received the produce, &, unknown to his wife, he employed it in part payment for the purchase of a real estate conveyed to him alone. The wife survived her husband:—Held: she was entitled to a lien on the real estate for the amount.—SCALES v. BAKER (1859), 28 Beav. 91; 3 L. T. 73; 6 Jur. N. S. 1134; 8 W. R. 287; 54 E. R. 300.

devisee & legatee. The widow married B. who, in 1793, took a conveyance of the premises contracted to be purchased by A. to himself & a trustee, reciting the contract by A., his will & death, the marriage of his widow with B.; & that "thereupon B. became entitled to the beneficial interest in the purchase." B. in 1817 sold the premises to C., & C. took a conveyance from B. & his trustee, reciting that, by certain good & sufficient assurances in the law, the premises stood limited to B. & the trustee, but not reciting the deed of 1793. The widow died, leaving her heir-at-law an infant, who came of age in 1825 in the lifetime of B. The bill was brought by the heir in 1836, after the death of B. for a conveyance of the estate:—Held: (1) the recital in the deed must be understood as stating that the widow was devisee of the purchased premises, & the title of B. accrued by the marriage; (2) the ct. would not presume, in favour of a purchaser, that B. had any other title than was so represented; (3) C. must be presumed to have been cognisant of, & to have taken the title of B. his vendor; (4) the equitable title of the heir-at-law of widow was not affected by the lapse of time; & the heir at-law was entitled to the decree for a conveyance of the estate.—NEESOM v. CLARKSON (1842), 2 Hare, 163; 12 L. Some time afterwards he made his will, bequeathing to her a much larger sum, & directing his exor., who was also his residuary legatee, to pay all his just debts:—Held: the concurrence of the wife in the receipt of the legacy by the husband was not a gift of it to him.—ROWE v. ROWE (1848), 2 De G. & Sm. 294; 17 L. 1428. —— —— No trustees appointed—Expenditure for domestic purposes.]—Pltf., during her husband's lifetime, was entitled, under a will, to a legacy for her separate use. The exors. paid the money, & the wife executed to them a release by deed, to which the husband was party. The money came into the husband's hands, but in what manner or under what circumstances there was no evidence to show, save that pltf. did not deny that it came to him & was paid by him to his bankers, & dealt with by him with her knowledge & consent. No communication took place between the husband & wife afterwards on the subject after the payment. The money was employed by the husband partly in his business & partly in the family expenditure. The husband died intestate, & the widow, pltf., claimed the sum out of the husband's assets, on the ground that he was a trustee of the same for her separate use:—Held: the employment of the money by the husband in the manner above mentioned, with the assent of the wife, rendered it impossible for the widow to claim the money out of the husband's assets.—GARDNER v. GARDNER (1859) 1 Giff. 126; 28 L. 1430. Bequest of shares—Transfer by executor to husband—Onus of proof on husband.]—Testator, who died in 1860, bequeathed a portion of the residue of his personal estate to his daughter, a married woman, for her separate use. Shares in certain cos. were allotted to her in respect of this bequest, which shares were transferred by the exor. of the will into the name of her husband. In 1862 a deed of release was given to the exor., which was executed both by the husband & the wife. Testator's daughter & her husband lived together on affectionate terms until 1884, when the husband died, having by his will bequeathed to his wife a legacy, & given her a life interest in all his property. During the whole of the time from 1860 to 1884 the husband received the dividends on the shares. He kept very careful books of account, from which it appeared that he did not pay the dividends to his wife, although he did pay to her the dividends of certain other property, which also belonged to her for her separate use. Before 1862 the shares were always referred to in the books as having originally belonged to the wife, but this mode of reference was discontinued after that date. The wife died in 1884, a few days after her husband; & the question was, whether the shares, which still remained in specie, formed part of her estate or of that of her husband:—Held: the mere transfer of the shares into the name of the husband was not per se evidence of a gift thereof to him; the burden lay upon those who represented him to show that the wife had given him the shares, which burden they had not discharged; & the shares must be treated as forming part of the wife's estate.—Re CURTIS, HAWES v. CURTIS (1885), 52 L. 1433. Married Women's Property Act, 1870, Amendment Act, 1874 (c. 50), s. 5—Application to debts contracted abroad.]—By the law of Jersey a husband is liable for the ante-nuptial debts of his wife, & the above Act does not apply to Jersey:—Held: notwithstanding, an Englishman married in England, after the passing of the Act, to a woman who has contracted debts while a feme sole in Jersey, is liable, in an action brought against them in England for those debts, to the extent only of the assets derived from his wife, & specified in sect. 5 of the Act.—DE GREUCHY v. WILLS (1879), 4 C. P. D. 362; 48 L. J. Q. B. 726; 41 L. T. 345; 43 J. P. 818; 28 W. R. 169.

1434. Onus on husband to show no assets.]—In an action against a husband & wife married since the above Act, for the recovery of a debt of the wife contracted before the marriage, it is not necessary that the statement of claim should allege that the husband has received assets of the wife; it is sufficient that he should simply allege that the husband is liable for the debt, leaving it to the husband to exercise his option of pleading non-liability under the provisions of the Act. A demurrer by the husband to pltf.'s statement of claim in such an action, on the ground that pltf. had failed to allege that the husband had received assets, was therefore overruled. SUB-SECT. 2.—SINCE MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACTS.

1456. Effect of Married Women's Property Acts.]—By the Act of 1870 the husband's liability for ante-nuptial debts was limited to the amount of any property he received with the wife at the time of marriage, by sect. 12 of that Act the wife being made liable to be sued for ante-nuptial debts as if she had continued unmarried. Under that sect. it was decided that judgment might be entered against a married woman personally, & the cts. of equity allowed the judgment to stand, & carried it out by ascertaining what separate estate the married woman had, & directing the trustees to pay the judgment debt & costs out of the separate estate. Then came the Act of 1882, which provided that a married woman should be capable of entering into contracts & rendering herself liable in respect of & to the extent of her separate property, & of suing & being sued, either in contract or in tort or otherwise, in all respects as if she were a feme sole, & that any damages or costs recovered against her in any such action or proceeding should be payable out of her separate property & not otherwise. That provision is contained in sub-sect. 2 of sect. 1 of the Act; & the question is what is the construction of that sub-sect. It is contended, on behalf of defts., that the words "in respect of & to the extent of her separate property" limit the whole of the sub-sect.; but I think that they do not. She can make a contract binding only to the extent of her separate property; but her power of suing & being sued is not so limited. She may sue & be sued "in all respects as if she were a feme sole." A feme sole can sue to judgment. She may obtain judgment, & may have judgment signed against her. Again, damages or costs may be recovered against a married woman, under the sub-sect. Recovery is the technical word for a common law judgment. Under an order of the Ct. of Ch. nothing is recovered until something further has been done. I think, therefore, that judgment in default, or under R. S. C., Ord. 14, may be signed against a married woman, but I think that execution should only issue against her separate estate (FIELD, J.).—PERKS v. MYLREA, [1884] W. N. 64; Bitt. Rep. in Ch. 128.

1457. Married Women's Property Act, 1870, Amendment Act, 1874 (c. 50)—Wife may be sued solely.]—By an ante-nuptial settlement it was provided that any property to which the wife, or the husband in her right, should become entitled "at

Upon the dissolution of her marriage by decree absolute of the Probate, Divorce, & Admlty. Div., a woman applied for variation of the marriage settlement. She afterwards married, & by an ante-nuptial settlement agreed to assign to the trustees of the settlement whatever sum might be ordered to be paid to her upon her application for variation of the first settlement upon trust for herself for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, etc. A sum of £5,000 was ordered to be paid to her out of funds settled by the first husband, & this sum was paid by the trustees of the first settlement to the trustees of the second settlement:—Held: the £5,000 was the married woman's "own property" within sect. 19 of the above Act, & was, therefore, liable to satisfy her ante-nuptial debts, notwithstanding a restriction against anticipation.—JAY v. ROBINSON (1890), 25 Q. After her marriage & while still an infant, she contracted a debt for which judgment was recovered against her separate estate. After this debt was contracted & before the woman attained her majority a post-nuptial settlement of all the property was made in 1884 under the Infants Settlement Act, 1855 (c. 43), to the wife for life for her sole & separate use with a restraint on anticipation & after her death to her husband & children. This settlement was approved by the Ch. Div. of the High Ct. The judgment creditor applied to have a receiver appointed of the property on the ground that such settlement was void as against creditors under Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 19:—Held: the settlement though made after the debt was contracted was valid as against creditors by virtue of the first part of Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 19, & the judgment creditor was not entitled to have a receiver appointed.—HEMINGWAY v. BRAITHWAITE (1889), 61 L. 1469. No personal liability.]—Under Debtors Act, 1869 (c. 62), s. 5, there is no power to commit to prison a married woman for her default in paying a sum for which judgment has been recovered against her by virtue of Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75). The proper form of judgment against a married woman under Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 1 (2), settled by the ct.

Up to the time of the coming into operation of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), a married woman could be taken in execution upon a judgment recovered after her marriage against her & her husband in respect of a contract made by her before marriage, & also upon a judgment recovered against her & her husband in respect of a wrongful act done by her during the marriage. But neither at law nor in equity was she liable to be taken in respect of a contract made by her during marriage. It seems to me that the Act of 1882 does not alter the legal liability of a married woman at all. It does not prevent the bringing of an action against a husband & wife in respect of a contract made by the wife before marriage, & it does not affect the case of a wrongful act committed by a woman during marriage, &, where at common law a married woman was liable to be taken under a ca. sa., in such cases she can now be summoned under Debtors Act, 1869 (c. 62), & be dealt with accordingly (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—SCOTT v. MORLEY (1887), 20 Q. 1471. Liability confined to separate property at time of contract.]—The contract entered into by a married woman "to bind her separate property," referred to in sect. 1 (4) of the above Act, is a contract entered into at a time when she has existing separate property. If the married woman commits a breach of such a contract, & a judgment is recovered against her for the breach, the judgment can be enforced against any separate property which she then has. But sect. 1 (4), does not enable a married woman who has no existing separate property to bind by a contract any separate property which she may possibly thereafter acquire.—Re SHAKESPEAR, DEAKIN v. LAKIN (1885), 30 Ch. 1472. —— Subsequent death of wife—Devolution to husband jure mariti.]—A husband by deed of gift settled leasehold property on his wife to her "own proper use & benefit," & the deed gave her "full power & authority to sue & give receipts." The husband died, & the wife married deft. After the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), the wife borrowed money from pltf. The wife died, & deft., without taking out administration, entered into possession of the property comprised in the deed of gift. Pltf. sued deft. to recover the money lent to the wife:—Held: (1) the deed made the property comprised in it the wife's separate estate; (2) by Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 1 (3), such property was bound by her contract when she borrowed the money; (3) on her death the property passed to deft. jure mariti, & administration was unnecessary; (4) deft. was the legal personal representative of his wife within Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 23, & therefore subject to the same liabilities as she would be subject to if living, & was therefore liable, but only to the extent of the property which had been her separate estate.—SURMAN v. WHARTON, [1891] 1 Q. 1473. —— Onus on plaintiff to prove separate property.]—Sect. 1 (2), of the above Act, does not make a married woman capable of rendering herself liable in respect of her separate property on any contract unless she has some separate property at the time the contract is made. In an action against a married woman to recover the price of goods sold & delivered to her:—Held: the onus was on pltf. to show that deft. had separate property at the time she made the contract.—PALLISER v. GURNEY (1887), 19 Q. 1474. —— —— .]—Where a married woman is deft. to an action on a contract, & has made default in the delivery of a defence, pltf.'s statement of claim must contain an allegation that deft. has separate estate; otherwise the ct. will refuse to make an order against deft. on the statement of claim under R. S. C., Ord. 27, r. 11.

In an action for specific performance of an agreement for a lease, pltf. was the intended lessor & deft. the intended lessee. Deft. was a married woman, & after entering an appearance to the action put in no defence, & the action came on in due course upon motion for judgment upon default of defence. The statement of claim contained no allegation that deft. had separate estate. The question arose whether pltf. was entitled to judgment against the separate estate of the married woman without having alleged in his statement of claim that she had separate estate :—Held : owing to the omission, no order could be made ; but that liberty would be given to pltf. to amend his statement of claim.—TETLEY v. GRIFFITH (1887), 57 L. 1477. ——— ——.]—Testatrix, who was twice married, by a settlement dated June, 2, 1890, & made on her first marriage, assigned her reversionary interest in a fund to trustees upon trust, after the fund had been received by them, upon her request to raise thereout a sum not exceeding £7,000, & to pay the same to her for her separate use, but so that she should not have power to alienate or charge that sum during coverture, & subject to such trusts to hold the fund upon trust for her for her life for her separate use without power of anticipation, & after her death upon trusts for her issue, & ultimately upon trust, if she should survive her husband, for her absolutely. By deed dated Jan. 29, 1891, in consideration of £10,000 advanced to testatrix's husband by his mother, he covenanted to repay the same with interest, & testatrix also covenanted that immediately upon the reversionary interest falling into possession she would request the trustees of the settlement to raise thereout £4,000 & pay it to herself, & that she, her exors. or administrators, would pay to her husband's mother the same or so much thereof as might be required to satisfy the amount due upon his covenant. He died in 1894. Testatrix married again in 1898, & thereupon settled her reversionary interest upon herself for life, with a general testamentary power of appointment in herself. The reversionary interest fell into possession in 1901. Testatrix, who never had any issue, by her will made in 1904 exercised the power of appointment, & thereby under sect. 4 of the above Act, made the appointed fund assets for the payment of her debts & other liabilities. She died in 1907, leaving her second husband her surviving. Her first husband's mother claimed under the covenant of Jan. 29, 1891, to be paid out of the settled fund the sum of £4,000, alleging that £8,500 & interest remained owing to her in respect of the £10,000 advanced by her. It was admitted that testatrix's covenant did not operate to charge the £4,000 upon the £7,000 by reason of the restraint on alienation or charging in the settlement of 1890. Evidence was filed on behalf of claimant that testatrix on her first marriage had received valuable presents of jewellery, & the ct. was asked to infer that she still had those presents as her separate property when she entered into the covenant six months later :—Held : (1) notwithstanding the exercise of the power of appointment by testatrix the onus was upon claimant to prove that at the date of her covenant testatrix had separate property in respect of which she ought to be deemed to have covenanted ; & there was practically no evidence to discharge that onus ; (2) even if testatrix had any jewellery at that time, it was not separate property with respect to which she could be supposed to have contracted, & consequently her estate was not liable for damages for breach of the covenant.—Re FIELDWICK, JOHNSON v. ADAMSON, [1909] 1 Ch. 1 ; 78 L. J. Ch. 153 ; 100 L. T. 106 ; 53 Sol. Jo. 47, C. A.

1478. Presumption of intention to contract with reference to separate estate—Separate banking account.]—Where a married woman had a separate banking account, & drew cheques upon it, & received & paid bills :—Held : to be evidence upon which it might be found that she had separate property, & had entered into contracts to pay bills out of it.—CLAREMONT v. WILMOT (1885), 1 T. L. R. 567, D. C.

1479. —— Separate property inalienable.]—The fact that the separate estate of a married woman is inalienable repels the presumption of law now raised by sect. 1 (3) of the above Act, that a contract made by her is "entered into with respect to, & to bind her separate estate," & shows "the contrary" within that sub-sect.—HARRISON v. HARRISON (1888), 13 P. 1480. —— Wearing apparel bought with income of restrained property.]—In an action against a married woman to recover the price of goods sold & delivered to her, it appeared that upon her marriage certain property had been settled upon her to her separate use with a restraint upon anticipation, the income of which she spent in the purchase of clothes for herself & her children, & that at the date of her contract with pltfs. she had no separate property free from restraint upon anticipation other than the clothes so purchased ;—Held : the test of her liability was the possession by her at the date of the contract of free separate property with respect to which she might reasonably be deemed to have contracted ; she could not reasonably be deemed to have contracted with respect to the clothes of herself & her children, & pltfs. were therefore not entitled to recover.—LEAK v. DRIFFIELD (1889), 24 Q. 1481. —— Woman carrying on separate business.]—A co. entered into a contract with a firm carrying on business in A. to indemnify them against a particular claimant, the co. being at liberty to use the name of the firm in defending any action brought by claimant. At the time when the contract was entered into an action in this country had been commenced by claimant. It was defended by the co. in the name of the firm & in their pleadings the co. stated that E., who was a married woman, had become the surviving partner of the firm. Judgment was given against the firm but no execution had issued thereunder, & it appeared that E., who resided in A., had no property in this country. E. brought an action to enforce the contract of indemnity. It was objected by the co.

that it had not been shown that E. had any separate estate & that she would therefore not be liable to the claimant:—Held: E. being a married woman carrying on a trade it must be assumed unless the contrary were shown that she had separate estate.—EDDOWES v. ARGENTINE LOAN & MERCANTILE AGENCY CO., LTD. (1890), 63 L. T. 364, C. A.

1482. —— Jewellery.]—In an action by certain jewellers against a married woman for jewellery supplied, the jury found that she had purchased the goods "on her own credit for her own use as her separate estate." According to the evidence, the only separate estate existing at the time of the contract was certain other jewellery previously supplied by pltfs. & a wardrobe of dresses, furs, & jackets, & there was no evidence of any separate property being subsequently acquired other than these:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to judgment, on the ground that such separate property was property in respect of which the married woman might reasonably be deemed to have contracted credit within the above Act, & the words "unless the contrary be shown," in sect. 1 (3) of that Act, only admit of evidence of the fact of there being no such separate property in respect of which a married woman could reasonably be deemed to have contracted, & not of any intention, or absence of intention, of the married woman so to contract, at the time of making the contract or getting credit.—BONNER & CO. v. LYON (1890), 38 W. 1484. —— Small sum of money.]—Where a married woman entered into a covenant in a mtge. deed for the payment of £400, & the only free separate estate which she was possessed of at the date of the covenant was a sum of money amounting to between £3 & £4:—Held: there was no presumption of law that the contract was entered into with respect to, & to bind such small separate estate, & the contract was not binding.—BRAUNSTEIN v. LEWIS (1891), 65 L. 1485. —— Accumulation of income of restrained property.]—Deft., a married woman, was sued for a sum of £53 being the balance of an account for groceries supplied to her from Mar. 1889 to Mar. 1890, while she was living apart from her husband. This balance consisted of a number of small items, some for a few pence, for goods supplied from time to time. The account commenced in 1885, & payments were made from time to time, the last payment being in July, 1890. Deft. was entitled to an income of upwards of £300 per annum payable to her, to her separate use for life, but subject to a restraint on anticipation. Her trustee received this income & paid it over to her as it was received, generally every month. Deft. was usually in debt to tradesmen, & as she received each cheque she cashed it, & paid away the bulk of the money so received to tradesmen on account of their bills, but she retained some portion, though only a few shillings, for her immediate use, & having a running account the amount of the goods was entered up & not paid for at the time. She was also entitled to the separate use of some furniture for her life, & if the furniture had been sold she would have had the income from the proceeds to her separate use, but with a restraint on anticipation. She lived rent free in a house belonging to her brother, & this house was furnished with her own furniture. She let the house on two occasions & received the proceeds, & she also had some trinkets & some wearing apparel of value. The county ct. judge held that deft. had sufficient separate estate from the accumulations of the income & the proceeds of letting the house, to form the ground of a contract within sect. 1 (2) of the above Act, & he gave judgment for pltf. for the whole amount:—Held: (SMITH, J.), there was no evidence to support the finding that on each date of the orders given deft. was possessed of separate estate of the requisite character whereon to found a contract; therefore, the judgment for the whole amount en bloc could not be supported, but must be set aside, with liberty to pltf. to go down to a new trial as to the exact position of deft. upon each of the dates upon which she contracted; (GRANTHAM, J.), there was ample evidence to show that deft. had sufficient separate estate, arising from accumulations of income, at the times she entered into these contracts, & this was so whether each item was to be taken as forming an independent contract, or whether the whole account was to be taken generally, & therefore deft. was liable for the whole amount claimed under the contracts.

The ct. being divided, the judgment for pltf. stood.—EVERETT v. PAXTON (1891), 65 L. T. 383; 56 J. P. 230; 7 T. L. R. 465, D. C.

1489. What is separate property—Reversionary interest.]—In an action against a married woman on a guarantee binding her separate estate the defence was that at the time of entering into the guarantee she had no separate estate in præsenti but only a reversionary interest in property settled to her separate use:—Held: she was "entitled to" separate property within sect. 1 (4) of the above Act.—LOIBL v. FRASER (1893), 9 T. 1490. Application of Act—Contract must be made for first time after passing of Act.]—Under sect. 1 of the above Act, in order to bind the separate estate of a married woman there must be a contract by her entered into after the passing of the Act, & then entered into for the first time. An acknowledgment since the Act of the fact that the married woman had had moneys advanced to her prior to the Act, but for which she was under no liability, having had no separate estate at the time of the advance, even if such acknowledgment is in such terms as would make a debt recoverable though barred by Stat. Limitations, is not sufficient to render her liable to repay such advances.—Re WHEELER, HANKINSON v. HAYTER, [1904] 2 Ch. 66; 73 L. J. Ch. 576; 91 L. T. 227; 52 W. R. 586; 48 Sol. Jo. 493.

1511. Surrender of furniture—In payment of husband's debts.]—To an action of trover it is an admissible defence, under the plea of not possessed, that an agent of pltf. had parted with the property to deft. by pltf.'s authority before action brought.

Pltf. was indebted to deft., & the wife of pltf. in his absence gave the furniture in question to deft. in payment of his debt, & deft. took it away. The jury believed that the wife had sufficient authority to do so, & found a verdict for deft. 1520. Evidence that credit given to wife—Existence of separate property.]—The general rule is, that a wife cannot bind her husband by her contract except as his agent; but in cases of orders given by the wife in those departments of her husband's household which she has under her control, or of orders for articles which are necessary for the wife, such as clothes, the jury, if the wife be living with the husband, ought to infer agency, if nothing appear to the contrary; but if the order is excessive in point of extent, & such as the husband never would have authorised, that will alone be sufficient to repel the inference of agency.

If it be proved that the wife has a separate income, that of itself goes to repel the inference of agency, & evidence that pltf. has made out the invoices to the wife, & has drawn bills of exchange on her for part of the amount, which she has accepted in her own name, payable at her own bankers from her separate funds, also goes to prove that the wife was not acting as the agent of the husband; & the fact that the husband sold some of the goods which were supplied to the wife & received the money for them, will not of itself make the husband liable in point of law to pay for them; but it is a fact for the consideration of the jury in determining whether the goods were supplied on the credit of the husband, & whether the wife was the agent of her husband.

Sect. 2.—As agent for husband: Sub-sects. 5, 6, 7, [illegible]

An allowance from the Ct. of Ch. for the maintenance of children is never granted unless it be shown that the husband has not a sufficient income to maintain his children without such an allowance. Such evidence is enough to show that avadavats & mocking birds are not necessaries for his wife (LORD ABINGER, C.B.).—FREESTONE v. BUTCHER (1840), 9 C. & P. 643, N.P.

1521. —— Goods booked to her alone.]—(1) Where goods for which a wife has ordinarily authority to contract on the part of her husband, such as articles of dress, are ordered by her & delivered at his residence, where she also resides, primâ facie the husband is liable, there being a presumption in law in favour of pltf. & any evidence to rebut the presumption, as that the articles are unnecessarily costly in their character, or that the credit was given exclusively to the wife, must be submitted to the jury.

(2) The question whether the party who ordered the goods was the wife of deft. must be raised at the trial; & the point is not raised, but rather waived, by an objection that the credit was given to the wife alone; &, semble: if the parties live together & the woman represents herself as the wife of deft. that is primâ facie evidence that they were married.

The objection that credit was given to the wife alone, means that it was given to her to the exclusion of her husband's liability, & the circumstance that the goods were booked to her alone, but in her marriage name as deft.'s wife, is not sufficient to show this; on the contrary, the fact that she was known by pltf. to be a married woman, & supposed to be deft.'s wife, is rather primâ facie evidence that credit was given to the husband.—JEWSBURY v. NEWBOLD (1857), 26 L. 1526. —— Notice by husband that not liable for debts.]—A married woman carried on in her maiden name a millinery business separately from her husband. A debtor's summons was issued against the husband & wife, claiming the payment of a sum due upon some bills of exchange drawn by the summoning creditor upon & accepted by the wife in her maiden name, & dishonoured. The husband applied to the ct. to dismiss the summons. He deposed that he never authorised his wife to pledge his credit, & that five years previously he had given notice to the summoning creditor that he had nothing to do with his wife's business. On this evidence, which was uncontradicted, the registrar made the common order staying the proceedings on security being given by the husband:—Held: on the evidence the husband was not liable for the debt, the issuing of the summons was an abuse of the procedure; & the summons must be dismissed with costs.—Re SHEPHERD, Ex p. SHEPHERD (1879), 10 Ch. q. Liability of husband—In absence of statutory certificate.]—A husband is liable for debts of his wife contracted in carrying on business in her own name so long as the certificate called for by M. 1528. Judgment recovered for part of debt.]—In an action against a husband & wife on the footing of a joint liability pltf., on certain admissions made by the wife, obtained judgment against her for £4, in respect of the amount claimed, with leave to defend as to the residue, the husband being given unconditional leave to defend as to the whole amount, & the action was remitted for trial to the county ct. At the trial the jury found that pltf. gave credit to the husband alone, & negatived the joint liability. The county ct. judge entered judgment against the husband for the claim, less the amount for which judgment had been signed against the wife, & the Div. Ct. affirmed his decision:—Held: on the finding of the jury the judgment against the wife for an indivisible part of the claim was a complete bar to the claim against the husband, & the county ct. judge was wrong in entering judgment against the husband.—FRENCH v. HOWIE, [1906] 2 K. Upon an application for leave to sign final judgment against both husband & wife for the amount claimed, the master gave leave, & pltf. signed judgment against both. The husband alone appealed. The judge in chambers set aside the judgment against the husband & gave him leave to defend. At the trial the judge found that there was no joint liability in the husband & wife, that the goods being primâ facie necessaries for the wife the husband primâ facie was the principal & the wife the agent, & he held that pltf. had not, by the judgment against the wife, elected to treat her as principal, & was entitled to recover against the husband:—Held: as the remedy was an alternative one, pltf., having signed judgment against the agent, could not afterwards recover judgment against the principal in respect of the same debt, & therefore the husband was not liable.—MOORE v. FLANAGAN, [1920] 1 K. 1533. ——— ———.]—In an action for goods sold & delivered, the admissions of deft.'s wife, who served in his shop, & conducted the business of it in his absence, are admissible, in evidence against her husband, although the goods were delivered previously to an application, for payment, when she admitted that a certain sum was due to pltf., & that she would pay it if he would make a deduction, to which she claimed to be entitled.—CLIFFORD v. BURTON (1823), 1 Bing. 199; 8 Moore, C. 1544. Previous contract adopted—With same party.]—Pltf. engaged with deft. for the services of his, pltf.'s, wife on a voyage from the East Indies to this country; & the wife, being enceinte & unable to perform the duties she had undertaken, afterwards agreed to procure a substitute at St. Helena, & that the wages paid to such substitute should be deducted from the sum to be paid for her services; to which agreement the husband subsequently assented. By a second agreement, the wife released deft. from the residue of the money due to herself:—Held: by adopting the first contract made by the wife at St. Helena, pltf. impliedly gave her authority to enter into the second agreement, & was therefore bound by it.—HARRINGTON v. M'DOWELL (1828), 7 L. (2) If he had, during the cohabitation, authorised her to deal with the tradesman on credit, he would have been bound to give notice of the revocation of that authority on the separation.—WALLIS v. BIDDICK (1873), 22 W. R. 76.

1549. Goods ordered by wife—With concurrence of husband.]—Where a husband & wife were living together, & furniture was supplied for, & work done at, the house, on the order of the wife, but the husband took part in making selections & giving directions as to the execution of the orders:—Held: the husband was liable to pay for the goods & work although he had expressly prohibited her from pledging his credit, & they had agreed together that she should pay for the goods & work.—JETLEY v. HILL (1884), Cab. & El. 239.

C. Wife Carrying on Husband's Business.

1550. Authority to bind husband—Business in wife's name—Husband sharing in profits.]—Deft., a baker & confectioner, was discharged under Insolvent Debtors Act, & the business, during his absence, & after his return from imprisonment, was carried on by his wife, who purchased goods in her own name. The wife was acknowledged by the landlord as tenant of the house in which they lived, & was rated in the books of the parish as the occupier. Deft. was aware of, & assented to, the dealings of his wife, &, being with her, partook of the profits of the trade:—Held: he was liable in an action for the price of the goods, notwithstanding that the invoices were made out in the name of the wife alone, she being his agent.—PETTY v. ANDERSON (1825), 3 Bing. 170; 2 C. & P. 38; 10 Moore C. P. 577; 3 L. J. O. S. C. P. 223; 130 E. R. 479.

1551. —— Wife giving orders as to particular order.]—It is competent to a jury to infer agency in a wife, to accept a notice with respect to a particular transaction in her husband's trade, from the circumstance of her being seen twice in his counting-house, appearing to conduct his business with reference to the transaction in question, & on one of these occasions giving directions to the foreman.—PLIMMER v. SELLS (1834), 3 Nev. & M. A., who kept a fruiterer's shop, in the year 1824, became bkpt., but did not surrender to his commission, & from that time to the year 1833 the business was carried on by A.'s wife. Fruit was supplied to her between the years 1828 & 1832, to an amount exceeding £266; & evidence was given that A. was seen in London a few times between 1824 & 1833, & was arrested at the shop in 1833, & that he attended the marriage of two of his daughters at M. church:—Held: proof of these facts was not evidence to go to the jury to show that A.'s wife acted as the agent of A., so as to charge him with the price of the fruit, although it might be sufficient to charge him with necessaries supplied to the wife.

Deft. coming to his wife's house could only make him liable for necessaries supplied to her (PARKE, B.).—SMALLPIECE v. DAWES (1835), 7 C. & P. 40, N. P.

A wife, unknown to her husband, requested her father to sell a field, to be paid for out of her savings. The father at first refused but he received the money, & shortly afterwards put the husband into possession. For ten years the money was retained by the father without payment of interest & the field by the husband without payment of rent. The father then attempted to eject the husband, who being made acquainted with the circumstances, insisted on retaining the field:—Held: the father was bound to convey it to the husband.—MILLARD v. HARVEY (1864), 34 Beav. 237; 11 L. It is a question for the jury whether the presumption arising from cohabitation is rebutted.

(2) If a husband turns his wife out of his house without the means of obtaining necessaries suitable to her estate & degree, it is a presumption of law, which cannot be rebutted by evidence, that she was turned out with her husband's authority to pledge his credit for such necessaries.

It is perfectly clear that medical attendance is one of the most primary necessaries (ERLE, C.J.).—HARRISON v. GRADY (1865), 13 L. T. 369; 12 Jur. N. S. 140; 14 W. R. 139.

1587. —— ——.]—Where the husband neither does, nor assents to, any act to show that he has held out his wife as his agent, to pledge his credit for goods supplied on her order, the question whether she bears that character must be examined upon the circumstances of the case. That question is one of fact. The management of the husband's house would raise a presumption of agency as to matters necessarily connected with that management, which might not be got rid of by a mere private arrangement between husband & wife. Otherwise where such management did not exist. A. was the manager of a limited co.'s hotel at Bradford, where his wife acted as manageress, they cohabited, he made his wife an allowance for clothes, but forbade her to pledge his credit for them. She purchased clothes in London, the bills for which were at first made out in her name & were paid by her. She afterwards incurred, with the same tradesmen, a debt for clothes, payment for which was demanded from the husband, with whom, previously, they had had no communication :—Held : the husband was not liable; in the circumstances here the mere fact of cohabitation did not raise a presumption of agency, nor require a proof of notice not to trust his wife.

The question is whether the mere fact of marriage implies a mandate by law making the wife the agent in law of her husband to bind him & pledge his credit. . . . There is no such mandate in law from the fact of marriage only except in the particular case of necessity, a necessity which may arise when the husband has deserted the wife or by his conduct compelled her to live apart from him (LORD SELBORNE, C.).—DEBENHAM v. MELLON (1880), 6 App. Cas. 24; 50 L. while they were living together, but without his actual assent or knowledge, the question whether they are necessaries, & suitable to her estate & degree as his wife, depends, on the one hand, not only on his actual, but upon his apparent income, as represented to the world by the rate at which he lives, & allows her to live; &, on the other hand, it depends partly upon the supply of similar articles, which, in fact, she may have had at the time of her ordering the goods in question. Apart from the authority implied in law, to pledge his credit for necessaries, there may be an authority, implied, in fact, from his approving of her having such things, & knowing that she had no means of paying for them; & thus, if a husband approves of his wife's hunting, & going to balls, etc. & knows she has no separate income, or none sufficient to pay for the requisite dresses, there may be an authority, implied, in fact, to pledge his credit for them, as otherwise she would not be able to obtain them. So far as the question depends upon her having a separate income or allowance, the question is not only whether it is adequate to the expenses, which he tacitly encourages & allows, but whether it is paid. & when the question is as to express prohibition to the wife to order goods on credit, it must appear that there was a direct, present, positive, absolute prohibition, & not a mere complaint of extravagance, or a declaration as to the future, that, if such extravagance is continued, he will not be answerable for her debts.

The law implies an authority from the husband to the wife to pledge his credit for necessaries suitable to her estate & condition as his wife, but that presumption may be rebutted; & if it appears that the wife has a sufficiency of the articles ordered, or that she has an allowance from her husband so that she could supply herself with such articles without pledging his credit, the presumption of an implied authority is then rebutted (COCKBURN, J.).

"You must not order any more goods on my credit," is a prohibition; but "If you go on in this way I shall stop your credit," is rather a threat of future prohibition than an actual & express present prohibition (COCKBURN, J.).—MORGAN v. CHETWYND (1865), 4 F. & F. 451, N. P.

It is not enough, where the burden of proof lies on pltf., for him to prove facts which are equally consistent with the negative as with the affirmative of the proposition which he has to establish.

The law infers that the wife has authority to contract for things that are really necessary & suitable to the style in which the husband chooses to live, in so far as the articles fall fairly within the domestic department which is ordinarily confided to the management of the wife, & it is incumbent on the tradesman who relies upon the goods coming within that description to prove affirmatively that they do so. The husband covenanted to pay her £20 a year towards the maintenance of three of the children of the marriage, & the wife covenanted to maintain these children until they were twenty-one, & not to apply for further assistance to her husband. The husband had kept up the annual payments of £20 in accordance with the terms of the deed. 1664. Effect of resumption of cohabitation—& subsequent separation.] By a deed of separation in 1862, a husband & wife covenanted that the wife should not be compelled to cohabit with the husband, that she might dispose of her own property, that she might live where she pleased, & that the husband should pay to her £100 a year while she should live chastely. From 1862 until 1872 the husband & wife lived apart; but in 1872 they resumed cohabitation. In 1879 they again separated, & in 1881 the wife obtained a decree of judicial separation, with alimony at the rate of £180 per annum. In an action by a lodging-house keeper against the husband for food & lodging supplied to the wife between July & Oct. 1880, the husband pleaded the deed of 1862, & that the £100 a year therein covenanted to be paid by him to his wife had been so paid:—Held: the deed was not rescinded by cohabitation having been resumed in 1872, the decree for alimony did not affect the deed, & the payment by the husband of the agreed sum was an answer to the action.

[Counsel] has shown us that where there is a deed between husband & wife by which an annuity is to be paid in consideration of separation, the cohabitation of husband & wife being thereupon suspended & payment of the annuity being made during such suspension, recohabitation, I should have thought ex vi termini, but at all events by law, puts an end to the deed. That is on the ground that if they are reconciled & resume cohabitation, the whole object of the deed is gone. I quite see the good sense of such reasoning. But that is confined to cases of separation deeds simpliciter, where the money covenanted to be paid is to be paid in consideration of cessation of cohabitation, & of course, therefore, only during cessation of cohabitation. But there is another class of cases where the deed contains other & separate provisions, a provision for an annuity during the life of the wife in some cases, a particular house given up to her in others; & where there are absolute provisions of that sort, the deed if a perfectly valid deed, & may be enforced by either party, notwithstanding recohabitation (LORD COLERIDGE, C.J.).—NEGUS v. FORSTER (1882), 46 L. 1706. —— —— Request to return.]—Where circumstances justify a wife in leaving her husband, a request on his part that she should return to his protection, will not determine his liability for necessaries supplied to her during the separation.

I take it to be a clear principle of law, that if a husband conducts himself towards his wife with such a degree of misconduct & cruelty, as to render it no longer safe for her to remain in the house, she is not to be turned into the street to starve, or to seek relief in the parish workhouse, but is justified in leaving her home, & goes forth into the world with a credit for the necessaries of life suitable to her condition (GARROW, B.).—EMERY v. EMERY (1827), 1 Y. & J. 501; 148 E. 1709. —— ——.]—Semble: if the husband is liable to maintain his wife, who is living apart from him, he is liable for money supplied to her to provide her with necessaries. If a wife quits her husband's house without cause, & upon her return he refuses to admit her, he is liable for her maintenance. So semble: if she is living apart from him with his assent.

PART VIII. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 2.—D. (b).

n. Liability of husband.]—Where a husband's conduct towards his wife is such that she is unable safely or or protection obtained by her under Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), will bar an action for such necessaries.

There are many things which would justify a wife in leaving her home, such as being exposed to indignity by her husband, bringing into the house a kept mistress, or cruelty. If in these circumstances she has left her home, she was clothed with her husband's credit, & he will be liable for all necessaries which were supplied her. She would also be justified in remaining away if, after the lapse of time, her husband requested her to return, provided she had a well-grounded belief that the indignities or cruelties would be renewed upon her return. But when a wife is living with her husband, & she leaves him without just cause, then she has no right to pledge her husband's credit. Any person who supplies a married woman living apart from her husband with goods must do so at his own peril, & must make out the authority of the wife to pledge her husband's credit to enable him to recover (CHANNELL, B.).—TEMPANY v. HAKEWILL (1859), 1 F. & F. 438, N. P.

1716. —— Improper restraint in madhouse.]—If a wife quits her husband's house, under a fair apprehension of personal violence, that is equivalent to her husband's turning her out of doors; & improper restraint of her person in a madhouse is, for this purpose, personal violence; & therefore a party supplying her with necessaries may recover for them against the husband. If she quits her husband's house because he brought a common woman to reside in it, that is also a sufficient reason for her going; & if the husband is sued for necessaries supplied to her, it is no answer to the action that she had committed adultery previous to the credit being given, if the husband did not know it till after the credit, nor that after the credit she obtained a decree for alimony, which alimony was to relate back to a period before the credit.—HOULISTON v. SMYTH (1825), 3 Bing. 127; 2 C. & P. 22; 10 Moore, C. Admissions of wife—Admissible.]—In assumpsit, for board & lodging supplied to deft.'s wife, if the defence is, the adultery of the wife, a statement made by her, confessing her adultery, which statement was made immediately previous to her husband turning her out of doors, is admissible in evidence on the part of the husband, & so are letters from different men, found by him at that time in her writing-desk.—WALTON v. GREEN (1825), 1 C. & P. 621, N. 1754. Verdict of jury—In action for crim. con.—Inadmissible.]—If a husband has put away his wife for adultery he is not liable even for necessaries supplied to her, if it be proved on the trial of an action for the price of such necessaries, that she has been guilty of adultery; but a verdict in an action of crim. con. is not receivable in evidence in such action, as it is res inter alias partes. If a husband put away his wife on a charge of adultery, & inform a tradesman with whom his wife has been in the habit of dealing that he has so done, the tradesman cannot recover for articles supplied to her unless they be necessaries, & the tradesman prove that the wife was actually in want of them, even though no evidence is given of the adultery.—HARDIE v. GRANT (1838), 8 C. & P. 512, N. 1755. ——— In suit for divorce—Not followed by decree—Inadmissible.]—In an action for necessaries supplied to the wife of deft. whilst living apart from him, deft. relied for defence upon the adultery of the wife, to establish which he put in the proceedings in a suit against her in the Divorce Ct. in which it was found by the jury that she had been guilty of adultery with co-resp. but in which there was no decree, the jury having also found petitioner had committed adultery:—Held: there being no judgment in the Divorce Ct. altering the status of the parties, the proceedings therein afforded no defence to the action. Semble: such a judgment or decree would be admissible under "never indebted."—NEEDHAM v. BREMNER (1866), L. 1758. Unless wife with sufficient allowance.]—Pltf. sued deft. for repairs done to the inside of deft.'s house which he held on a long lease. The orders were given by deft.'s wife, who was residing with her children in the house, deft. at the time being a lunatic & in an asylum. After some of the repairs had been done, pltf. became aware that deft. was a lunatic; but he continued to do the repairs under the wife's direction. The repairs were necessary for the house: but after paying for deft.'s maintenance in the asylum, the wife received the whole of the deft.'s income, & had also an allowance from friends of deft., & what she received was sufficient for all purposes, including the repairs to the house:—Held: deft. was not liable: for that the authority of a wife to pledge her husband's credit was no greater in the case of a lunatic than in the ordinary case of husband & wife.—RICHARDSON v. DU BOIS (1869), L. 1761. Judicial separation—Effect of.]—(1) Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 26 absolutely puts an end to the right of a wife who has obtained a decree for judicial separation to pledge her husband's credit or to contract on his behalf during the continuance of the judicial separation except where alimony has been decreed & has not been duly paid. Consequently, so long as the husband duly pays the alimony which he has been ordered to pay, the wife has no power to pledge his credit for necessaries which the alimony could not have been reasonably supposed to cover, as where the wife has been put to expense by the misconduct of the husband.

The provision in the second part of Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 26, with regard to the wife's contracts, that "the husband shall not be liable in respect of any engagement or contract she may have entered into," is governed by the preceding part of the sect. which provides that the wife, "whilst so separated," shall be considered a feme sole for the purposes of contract, & is limited to engagements & contracts entered into by the wife during the period of separation. Consequently the husband is not relieved by a decree of judicial separation from his liability under a contract which has been properly entered into by the wife on his account under her implied agency by reason of the coverture, & which remains in fieri at the date of the decree. A wife acting under the implied authority of the husband retained a solr. to defend her in a divorce suit instituted by her husband, & also to commence an action of detinue against her husband in respect of her clothes. The divorce suit was dismissed against the husband with costs, & a decree of judicial separation was made in favour of the wife. After the decree of judicial separation the wife obtained, first, an order increasing the interim alimony which had been previously allowed her, &, afterwards, an order for permanent alimony, & the action for detinue was tried & decided in the wife's favour. In the meantime the husband had instituted a second divorce suit, which was also resisted by the wife & dismissed with costs. On the taxation of the wife's costs of these proceedings under an order of course obtained by her solr. against the husband, the husband, who had duly paid the alimony as required by Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 26, disputed his liability to pay any costs, beyond the party & party costs, which he had been ordered to pay, after the decree of judicial separation :—Held : (2) as to the costs of the second divorce suit, the husband was not liable ; (3) as to the costs of the action of detinue the husband was liable inasmuch as the retainer continued until the conclusion of the action unless expressly withdrawn by the husband ; (4) as to the costs of the alimony proceedings, the husband was liable inasmuch as they were part of the proceedings in the first divorce suit.—Re WINGFIELD & BLEW, [1904] 2 Ch. 665 ; 73 L. Although the cts. of common law do not recognise the right of a person to recover from the husband money advanced to the wife to enable her to provide herself with necessaries ; the cts. of equity do not require that the person making such advances should have himself supplied the wife with necessaries, but hold that he is entitled to stand in the place of the person who actually supplied such necessaries, & to recover from the husband such sums of money so advanced to the wife as have been duly applied in providing her with necessaries, having regard to the husband's circumstances & position in life.—JENNER v. MORRIS (1861), 3 De G. The wife had no means adequate to support her according to her husband's degree :—Held : as the child was by law properly in the care of the wife, the reasonable expenses of providing for it were part of the reasonable expenses of the wife for which she had authority to pledge her husband's credit.

A husband whilst his wife resides with him choses his own style of life at least in theory. . . . But when the husband has without cause turned his wife out of doors, or by his own fault rendered it impossible for her to reside with him, the rule is changed. The husband is no longer the sole judge of what is fit, but the law gives the wife, in such a case, authority to pledge his credit for her reasonable expenses, leaving it to be determined by others what is reasonable. The increase in the husband's liability only comes into play when he is in fault, & so is not unjust (BLACKBURN, J.).—BAZELEY v. FORDER (1868), L. R. 3 Q. 1787. Costs as necessaries—For which husband liable.]—(1) A. commenced a suit against his wife in the ecclesiastical ct., for the purpose of obtaining a divorce on the ground of adultery. The wife retained a proctor, to whom a large sum became due in respect of costs. While the suit was in progress A. became bkpt. A.'s proctor, after the bkpcy. by A.'s authority declined to proceed with the suit. The wife's proctor, after the bkpcy., having procured a taxation of his costs up to the bkpcy., & tendered a proof in respect thereof against A.'s estate:—Held: he was entitled to make such proof.

(2) A commission to examine witnesses was opened a day or two before the bkpcy., but was not returned until a day or two after:—Held: the whole of the costs of the commission were for the purpose of the proof, "costs incurred before the bkpcy."

Why, then, is it not to be considered that the husband was at the time of the bkpcy. legally indebted to the petitioner in the amount of his bill at that time? The bill appears to be as much for necessaries properly furnished to the wife, as a bill for ordinary provisions, clothing, & medical attendance would have been. They were not less justly chargeable upon the husband than the costs of an attorney employed by her to defend herself against an indictment for a crime, if she had been falsely accused, & her husband had refused to interfere. A man, without cause, turning his wife out of doors, sends her into the world with the power of obtaining credit against him for necessaries. All her tradesmen became the creditors of the husband. In like manner it appears to me that by causelessly sending the wife into the Ecclesiastical Ct. to meet a charge of imputed adultery, the husband enables her to obtain credit in the same way, & the proctor employed by the wife becomes the creditor of the husband (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C.).—Ex p. MOORE (1845), De G. 173; *sub nom. The costs thereof being allowed upon taxation, the proctor for the husband objected to the registrar's report:—Held: the ordinary practice of the ct. was to have two counsel on each side; a wife was primâ facie therefore entitled thereto; & the special circumstances of the present case did not afford sufficient ground for exception.

The wife is not to be barred of her right to two counsel by reason of what has passed between the two proctors out of ct.

1789. —— ——.]—If a wife, from reasonable apprehension of personal violence, leave her husband's house, & it becomes necessary, for her protection, that she should obtain a divorce a mensâ et toro, the law gives her authority to pledge her husband's credit for the expenses of the proceeding; & the question as to the husband's liability is, whether, at the commencement of the proceeding, there was such reasonable ground in fact for anticipating ill treatment that the divorce was necessary for the protection of the wife. Such reasonable ground is not furnished by a momentary ebullition of temper on the part of the husband, nor by a threat of violence from which no serious intention to commit violence can be inferred.—BROWN v. ACKROYD (1856), 5 E. & B. 819; 25 L. 1790. —— ——.]—The costs of a suit justifiably instituted by a married woman against her husband for a divorce or a judicial separation, are necessaries for which she may pledge her husband's credit. A., a married woman, living apart from her husband, consulted pltfs. respecting the ill usage she had received from her husband, consisting of his adultery & cruelty. They therefore made inquiries, & having satisfied themselves that there were good grounds for legal proceedings, they commenced a suit in the Divorce Ct. on A.'s behalf. Before such suit was brought to a hearing, A. & her husband came to an arrangement whereby he executed a deed securing to her an annual allowance. The attorneys having sued the husband for their bill of costs, the jury in reply to questions left to them by the judge, found that there was legal cruelty; that pltfs. made full inquiries to satisfy themselves & to justify them in acting as A.'s solrs.; but that it was not necessary in order to obtain the deed of separation to carry on the proceedings by filing the petition in the Divorce Ct. Upon a verdict upon this finding being entered for pltfs.:—Held: the action was maintainable, & the costs incurred by pltfs. in the proceedings at the suit of A. were, subject to taxation, properly chargeable against her husband.—STOCKEN v. PATTRICK (1873), 29 L. 1792. —— ——.]—Pltfs.' claim is based on the allegation that the costs incurred by them on behalf of the wife are necessaries. There is no doubt that, on the evidence, the sums claimed by pltfs. are for expenditure necessary for maintaining the wife's rights against her husband, but deft.'s answer is that the divorce has been obtained by collusion & that pltfs. were parties to that collusion. I am satisfied that pltfs. neither knew of nor were in any way parties to any collusion; there will be judgment for them for the amount found to be due on taxation, not confined to party & party costs, but to include all sums reasonably necessary which were incurred on behalf of the wife, together with the costs of this action (SWIFT, J.).—

1800. —— —— Previous adultery of wife concealed.]—A wife, who had been guilty of adultery which was unknown to her husband, instructed a solr. to commence proceedings against her husband for divorce on the grounds of his adultery & cruelty. The solr., who was not told of his client's adultery, made inquiries & had reasonable grounds for thinking that the charges of adultery & cruelty against the husband would be made out, & accordingly presented a divorce petition. Subsequently the husband discovered his wife's adultery, & on the wife's solr. being informed of the fact the divorce petition was abandoned. The wife's solr. then claimed in an action based on the wife's agency of necessity at common law to recover the costs of the petition from the husband :—Held : the solr. was not entitled to recover, because, although he had reasonable grounds for believing that the charges of adultery & cruelty would be established against the husband, he had to take the risk of his own client, the wife, misinforming him as to her own conduct, & as she had committed adultery she was not entitled to pledge her husband's credit for the costs of her divorce petition.—DURNFORD v. BAKER, [1924] 2 K. 1801. —— ——.]—In a suit by a husband for divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery, the wife in her answer denied the adultery, & made countercharges that petitioner had been guilty of great unkindness towards her, & had kept her without food, & had deserted her; & further, that he had committed adultery with a woman unknown. Particulars of this last plea were asked for & given. Petitioner, in his reply, denied the countercharges. At the hearing, the wife did not go into the witness box, & the ct. found for petitioner upon all the issues & pronounced a decree nisi. Upon application by counsel for resp. that she should be allowed the usual order for her costs, the learned judge expressed the opinion, that, as the case was undefended, no such costs ought to be allowed without an explanation from the solr. as to how he came to put an answer upon the record, & to contest the case at all. Counsel for resp. thereupon called the country solr. who had acted as solr. for resp., & he stated, in effect, that resp. brought him the petition & citation with which she had been served, & asked him to act for her; that she instructed him that the charge made against her in the petition was untrue, but that she had been requested to leave the house where she had been staying. The solr. saw resp.'s sister, in reference to the countercharges of unkindness & desertion, & both she & resp. asserted that no misconduct had taken place prior to the alleged desertion. He did not make inquiries of the people at the house, where resp. had resided apart from her husband, as he gathered that the latter had received his information from those people, & that as they were hostile to resp., & one or more of them would probably be called at the hearing in support of petitioner's case, anything that they might be able to say in regard to resp. had better be left to be dealt with in cross-examination. The solr. further stated that this was the first divorce case in which he had been retained, & that he had acted throughout with bona fides:—Held: (1) to warrant a petitioner, husband, in opposing & the ct. in refusing, the usual order for a wife's costs, it is not necessary to show "misconduct" on the part of the wife's solr.; (2) a solr. acting for the wife in a matrimonial case is not entitled to rely upon his client's instructions, but, in order to entitle him to look to the husband for payment of the wife's costs, he must fairly investigate for himself the various points put forward by the wife as a defence, & must satisfy himself in regard to their reasonableness.—WALKER v. WALKER & LAWSON (1897), 76 L. The wife suing in a matrimonial matter is able to hold out an inducement to a solr. that, even if she fails, the husband will be held liable to pay her costs, unless her case is obviously bad. The law says that her costs are in the nature of necessaries. . . . Although the solr. has that right against the husband, the wife is still liable. This account was on Dec. 17, 1902, transferred to the joint names of himself & his wife, & drawn on by both husband & wife. On May 18, 1903, when the husband was absent, the wife deposited with the bank the deeds of a house belonging to her, & charged them for the debt then or thereafter to become due to the bank from her either solely or jointly with any other person & agreed to execute a legal mtge. containing a covenant for payment & a power of sale & other proper clauses. The wife died on Aug. 27, 1904, leaving furniture worth £300 to the husband absolutely, & the house she had mortgaged to the bank, worth about £1,400 to her husband for life, with remainder to her next of kin. The overdraft on May 18, 1903, was £107 & at the date of her death it was £414. The wife had paid in about £100 into the account:—Held: the inference was that the husband & wife agreed to provide jointly for current household expenses, & each of them ought to pay one moiety of the overdraft.—Re SHAW, SHAW v. JONES (1906), 94 L. 1830. —— ——.]—Since Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), a gift of chattels can be made to a husband & wife jointly as effectively as it can to two persons between whom the marriage relationship does not exist. A husband & wife can make a valid contract with respect to the ownership or enjoyment of chattels in their joint possessions as effectively as two persons can between whom the marriage relationship does not exist, & such a contract & its terms may be inferred from the terms & manner on & in which the parties have dealt & acted. If a husband & wife each have some cash & income, & they mutually arrange that her money & his shall form a joint fund kept in an account in the husband's name for the purpose of their joint establishment, & the ct. can infer that things have been purchased by the two & paid for out of the joint fund, such things are not exclusively the husband's in the sense that on deserting his wife he can bring an action to recover possession of them & claim to be entitled to deprive her of any right to them.—HUNT v. HUNT (1908), 25 T. 1832. —— Husband & wife living together—Non-payment of interest.]—By a marriage settlement, dated in 1847, a fund belonging to the wife was vested in trustees in trust for investment "on real or personal securities bearing interest," with power of varying investments with the written consent of the husband & wife or the survivor, & to pay the income to the wife for her separate use without power of anticipation, then to the husband for life, & after the death of the survivor, as to the capital, upon the trusts therein mentioned. In 1852 the trustees, on the written consent of the wife, lent the trust fund in cash to the husband on the security of his bond in a penal sum, conditioned for repayment to the trustees of the sum advanced with interest at 4 per cent. per annum six months after date. The bond contained no stipulation in terms for payment of interest beyond the six months. The husband & wife lived together in amity for more than twenty years after the date of the bond, the wife dying in 1876 & the husband in 1896. At his death the bond was found in his possession. He never, either during his wife's lifetime or afterwards, paid any interest on the bond or gave any written acknowledgment of his indebtedness under it:—Held: the bond debt was not barred by Stat. Limitations, s. 5, on the grounds that the bond, being a penalty bond, was an interest-bearing security carrying interest, though not mentioned, beyond the date fixed for payment of the debt; that as the husband & wife had lived together in amity it was unnecessary, in order to prevent the statute from running, to go through the formality of the husband paying the interest to the trustees, the trustees paying it to the wife, & the wife paying it to the husband; & that, as the husband took with full notice that the money lent was trust money & liable to investment on interest bearing security, he was in the position of an express trustee.—Re DIXON, HEYNES v. DIXON, [1900] 2 Ch. 561; 69 L. 1833. Non-payment of capital money to trustees of settlement.]—Testator, who was entitled to a mtge. debt vested in a trustee for him, assigned the same to the trustees of his marriage settlement in 1886 upon trusts under which he took the first life interest, & his wife a life interest after his death, subject to a restraint upon anticipation, with an ultimate trust in default of children, as happened, for testator absolutely. The trustees of the mtge. debt was neither a party to, nor informed of, the settlement. In 1887 the mtge. money was paid to testator, who never accounted for it to the settlement trustees. He died in 1916, & the trustees & widow now claimed the mtge. moneys:—Held: (1) testator was a constructive trustee who had constituted himself such by receiving trust property with the knowledge that it was trust property & the persons representing his estate were not entitled to avail themselves, by analogy, of Stat. Limitations, but must make good the mtge. money to the trustees of the settlement; (2) no acquiescence on the part of the wife while she was restrained from anticipation could prejudicially affect her claim.—Re EYRE-WILLIAMS, WILLIAMS v. WILLIAMS, [1923] 2 Ch. 533; 92 L. 1850. —— - —.]—Sect. 1 (2) of above Act has not abolished the common law right to sue both husband & wife for a tort committed by the wife during coverture, & in such an action the husband & wife cannot put in separate & inconsistent defences. A husband & wife were sued in the old common law form of action for a libel written & published by the wife during coverture. One statement of defence was delivered. In paragraph 1 the husband said that so far as he was liable, as the husband of the other deft., he paid money into ct. in satisfaction of the claim. In paragraphs 2 to 5 the wife pleaded a denial of liability:—Held: there could be only one defence to the action, namely, the one which the husband put on the record, & the inconsistent defence of the wife must be struck out.—BEAUMONT v. KAYE, [1904] 1 K. B. 292; 73 L. J. K. B. 213; 90 L. T. 51; 52 W. R. 241; 20 T. L. R. 183; 48 Sol. Jo. 206, C. A.

1851. —— ——.]—Notwithstanding above Act, which provides that a married woman shall be capable of suing or being sued as if she were a feme sole, a husband is still liable to be sued with his wife for a tort committed by her during coverture, unless the tort is directly connected with a contract with her & is the means of enforcing it.

A married woman, by fraudulently misrepresenting that her husband wanted money to pay rates & do repairs to his house property, induced certain persons to advance a sum of money, which she spent for her own purposes. The husband never authorised his wife to borrow the money or make the representation on his behalf. In an action by the lenders against the husband & wife for the fraud of the wife:—Held: the husband was not liable: (LORD FINLAY, ATKINSON & SUMNER, L.JJ.), on the ground that the wife impliedly warranted that she had her husband's authority to borrow the money on his behalf, & therefore the fraud was connected with a contract; (LORD CAVE, C., LORD BIRKENHEAD), on the ground that the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, had abrogated the common law rule as to the husband's liability for his wife's torts.—EDWARDS v. PORTER, [1925] A. 1852. Tort of wife against husband—Liability of husband.]—A legacy was bequeathed in trust for tenant for life, & after her decease to be distributed amongst a class of persons, one of whom was a female, H. During the lifetime of the tenant for life, H., representing herself to the trustee as a married woman, requested him to make two several advances, amounting to nearly the value of the whole of her share, to R., her reputed husband. This the trustee did, relying on the representations of H. & R. as to their being married, & on receiving the consent of R. to pay interest on one of the sums so advanced, & that both sums, together with interest on the other advance, should be allowed in account as part of H.'s, then reversionary, share. No interest was paid to the trustee; but he continued to pay the income of the fund to the tenant for life out of his own pocket. Upon the death of the tenant for life, the fund fell into possession, & it then came to light that H. had been married to pltf. many years prior to the advance, had deserted her husband, & not having, as she said, seen or heard of him for many years had married R. Pltf. claiming the share in right of his wife, the trustee asked to be allowed to set off the advances, on the ground that pltf. was liable for the torts of his wife. The ct. considered that pltf. could not be held liable for the wrongs of his wife committed against himself, & held, as the trustee had been guilty of a breach of trust, he was liable to make good to pltf. the whole fund, with costs of the suit.—SPORLE v. BARNABY (1864), 11 L. 1876. Judicial separation—After action brought—Before judgment—Husband not liable.]—The intention & effect of Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 26, is to put the wife for all civil purposes in the same position as if her husband were dead during all the time that the decree of judicial separation is in force, &, therefore, the pronouncement of the decree, after the commencement of an action against a husband & wife for the wife's tort, but before judgment, entitles the husband to be discharged from the action to which he was a party only for the sake of a rule of conformity which no longer applies to the woman who is being sued. In an action against husband & wife for fraudulent representations by the wife after the marriage whereby pltf. sustained damage it appeared that the husband had no knowledge of or connection with the fraud, & that the wife had obtained a decree absolute for judicial separation from him after the commencement of the action but before judgment:—Held: upon the proper construction of Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 35), s. 26, the husband was entitled to judgment.—CUENOD v. LESLIE, [1909] 1 K. Defts. were living together at the time the money was so paid by pltf., but subsequently the male deft. obtained a judicial separation from his wife. At the trial the jury found that the alleged misrepresentations were made by the female deft. to the pltf.; that the alleged misrepresentations were not made by her as agent for her husband, that they were not made at his instigation, but that they were made with his knowledge, authority, & acquiescence; that the male deft. derived benefit by receiving £240 from his wife knowing it to be derived from the swindle; that the motive of the male deft. in petitioning for a decree of judicial separation from his wife was to avoid liability:—Held: there was evidence upon which the jury could find that the male deft. & his wife were joint tortfeasors.—BURDETT v. HORNE (1911), 28 T. SUB-SECT. 7.—HUSBAND AND WIFE LIVING APART.

1878. Husband liable—Whether separation permanent or temporary.]—A man is answerable to a third person for what is done by his wife, so long as the relation of husband & wife continues, though they may be permanently living apart; at least, if it be not shown that the wife at the time was living in adultery.

Whether the separation be permanent or temporary it does not affect the question, unless it operates so upon the marriage as to make that civil relation cease; for, you cannot bring an action against the wife without joining the husband, & a man would be without remedy if he could not sue the husband (TINDAL, C.J.).—HEAD v. BRISCOE (1833), 5 C. & P. 484; 2 L. SUB-SECT. 8.—TORTS ARISING OUT OF CONTRACT.

See, now, Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 1 (2).

1880. General rule.]—(1) Although a husband is not liable on his wife's contract, he is liable for any fraud or other tort committed by her during the coverture, unless it is directly connected with the contract & is the means of effecting or inducing it & is part of the same transaction. That liability, which existed before Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), is not affected by the Act nor is the remedy of the party injured limited by the Act to the wife's separate estate, if any. Thus, where since the Act a contract had been entered into by K., a married woman, with E., under which E. was to pay K. a sum of money in a certain event, & subsequently K. induced E. to pay her the money by a false representation that the event had happened:—Held: as the contract had not been induced by the fraud & was altogether independent of it, K.'s husband was liable to E. in damages for his wife's fraud; & Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), did not exempt the husband from his liability.

(2) The expression "need not be joined" in Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 1 (2), does not mean that, whenever a pltf. is suing a married woman in contract or in tort, he "shall not" join the husband with her, but only that the joinder, which was formerly necessary, is now unnecessary if pltf. is seeking to obtain satisfaction out of the wife's separate estate alone.—EARLE v. KINGSCOTE, [1900] 2 Ch. 585; 69 L. 1883. —— —— —— Procuring advance to third party.]—A feme covert is responsible for all torts committed by her during coverture, & the husband must be joined as a deft. ; & consequently they are liable for frauds committed by her, as for other personal wrongs ; but when the fraud is directly connected with the contract with the wife, & is the means of effecting it, & parcel of the same transaction, the wife cannot be responsible, & the husband be sued for it together with the wife. Therefore an action will not lie against a husband & wife for a false & fraudulent representation by the wife to pltf., that she was sole & unmarried at the time of her signing a promissory note as surety to him for a third person, whereby pltf. was induced to advance a sum of money to that person.—LIVERPOOL ADELPHI LOAN ASSOCN. v. FAIRHURST (1854), 9 Exch. 422 ; 2 C. 1885. —— —— Of authority to contract for husband.]—A married woman, to enable a friend to borrow money, handed him a life insurance policy belonging to her husband &, at the request of the intending borrower, signed her husband's name to a document drawn up by the proposed lender authorising him to hold the policy as collateral security for the borrower's promissory note. Relying on this document the lender advanced the money to the borrower, who did not repay it. These acts of the wife were done without the knowledge or authority of her husband. In an action by the husband against the lender to recover the policy the lender counterclaimed against the husband & wife for the fraud of the wife :—Held : the wife warranted either that the document was a genuine document or that she had her husband's authority to sign it ; her fraud was therefore connected with a contract, & the husband was not liable.—MCNEALL v. HAWES. 1889. Husband liable.]—A baker was desirous of disposing of his shop & the goodwill of his business, & in consequence an advertisement was inserted in a newspaper, stating that the house was doing twelve sacks a week. The advertisement was inserted by the broker in consequence of a conversation with the baker's wife, who managed the business for him, in which conversation she told the broker that they did between nine & ten sacks a week, upon which he said : "We must make it twelve for the paper." In consequence of the advertisement, a person desirous of purchasing, went to the wife, & said to her : "Are you really doing anything like this business ?" to which she replied : "Yes, we are doing eleven sacks," & appealed to the man in the shop who confirmed her statement. The baker himself did not appear at all in any part in the transaction, except that he received the purchase money, & paid the broker his commission. In an action brought by the purchaser on the representation contained in the advertisement :—Held : the baker was personally & individually answerable in damages, inasmuch as though he did not make any representation himself, yet he made the wife his agent, & was bound by her statements.—TAYLOR v. GREEN (1837), 8 C. & P. 316, N. 1890. ——.]—Testator by will bequeathed the income of a fund in trust for his niece, a married woman, for life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation, & subject thereto for her children. By a codicil testator, after reciting that his niece's husband was dead, directed, that if she should marry again without the consent of the trustees, the benefit given to her under the will should cease, & she should take an annuity of £50 a year. The niece married again without the trustees' knowledge, & after they had refused their consent. She afterwards filed a bill describing herself as a widow, & made an affidavit declaring she was not married. In that suit certain orders were made in her favour. After her death the trustees discovered the marriage & filed a bill against the surviving husband, charging against him fraud, & subornation of perjury. It appearing from the evidence that the husband was cognisant of his wife's rights, & of the filing of the bill, he was decreed to recoup to the estate the sums that had been paid on the false statement of his late wife, & to pay the costs of pltfs., so far as they arose out of the allegations of fraud which had been established.—CHARLTON v. COOMBES (1863), 4 Giff. 382 ; 8 L. After the death of the testator, A. married, & on the occasion of the marriage certain property was settled for her separate use. Her husband allowed her to receive the annuity or legal rentcharge, & she misapplied it:—Held: A.'s separate estate was not chargeable with the moneys so misapplied, but the husband only was liable, the tort being his, & there being no difference between general torts in reference to trusts & general torts at law.—WAINFORD v. HEYL (1875), L. 1896. —— ——.]—The defaults of a feme trustee during coverture are chargeable to her husband. Testator appointed his wife & two others exors. & trustees; directed his business & a leasehold house to be sold, & gave the residue, which was principally leasehold property, to his wife, directing that if she married again it should be settled to her separate use for life; then he bequeathed the house if not sold, & the money settled as above stated & all money, etc., so settled upon her for her lifetime, to certain other persons; but if his wife should not marry again he left the property to her own disposal at her death. The widow married again two years after testator's death; the leaseholds were not converted, & she received the entire income till her death, twenty-nine years afterwards, by which time the greater portion of the terms of years had run out. Her second husband, who survived his wife & her co-trustees, never acted in the trust:—Held: the leaseholds ought to have been converted upon the widow's second marriage, & the second husband was liable as a trustee having legal control over the trust property, for a breach of trust in permitting the tenant for life to receive the entire income of the unconverted property. The husband was ordered to recoup to the trust estate the difference between the income of the leaseholds received by himself or his wife during the coverture, & the dividends which would have been produced by a sale thereof at the time of her marriage & investment of the proceeds in Consols. Semble: the excess of income thus received by the tenant for life must be held as received by her husband through her hands.—Re SMITH'S ESTATE, CLIFFORD v. WASHINGTON (1879), 48 L. SECT. 1.—VALIDITY.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1900. Presumption of legality—Until contrary proved—Onus of proof of illegality.]—A separation deed recited that divers unhappy differences subsisted between the husband & wife, in consequence of which they had agreed to live separate. The husband then covenanted to pay an annuity to a trustee for the wife during her life; but there was no covenant on the part of the trustee, or any other person, to indemnify the husband against the debts of the wife. The husband died, & the annuity became in arrear:—Held: the covenant might be enforced against the husband's exors.; for, there being no evidence to the contrary, there might have been circumstances, alluded to by the recital, which would have warranted a divorce a mensâ et thoro; but that the covenant, being voluntary, could not be enforced against the husband's creditors.—CLOUGH v. LAMPERT (1839), 10 Sim. 174; 3 Jur. 672; 59 E. 1902. Deed partly valid & partly invalid—Whether divisible.]—Qu.: Whether an ante-nuptial contract, whereby the intended husband agreed to secure to the intended wife an annuity for her separate maintenance in the event of his death, or any separation taking place between them during their lives, is void; &, if not, whether such contract is valid so far as it is intended to secure an annuity to the wife in case of a separation or divorce for any cause; or whether it is valid to the extent of securing the annuity to the wife in case of desertion by the husband, or divorce without misconduct on the part of the wife; or whether it is valid only to the extent of securing the annuity to the wife in the event of her surviving the husband.—COCKSEDGE v. COCKSEDGE (1845), 5 Hare, 397; 67 E. R. 966.

1903. —— —— Deed & agreement for separation distinguished.]—(1) A married woman having instituted proceedings against her husband in the ecclesiastical ct. for a divorce, on the ground of adultery & cruelty, an agreement for a separation was made & signed by husband & wife, but not by any trustee on the lady's part, although a trustee was nominated in the agreement. Upon this the wife abandoned her suit. A deed, to which the trustee was made a party, was afterwards, in conformity with the agreement, prepared & engrossed, but the husband refused to execute it. The agreement, amongst other things, contained provisions as to the custody of the children, by which two would remain in the wife's custody & to the exclusion of the husband, & by which, in case one of the children residing with her should die, the husband should resign to her one of those residing with him. A demurrer for want of equity to a bill filed by the lady for specific performance of the agreement having been allowed, pltf. appealed:—Held: the provisions as to the custody of the children being against public policy, & an agreement for separation only having been executed, the ct. was bound to allow the demurrer.

(2) Where a deed of separation has been executed, the ct. will enforce such parts of it as are valid, & reject the rest; but secus in a mere agreement, which must be enforced in its entirety, if at all.

(3) The covenant was that the children should at all times thereafter be under the sole care, management & protection of the wife. 1907. Proof of validity—Prior to appointment of new trustees.]—Upon a petition to appoint new trustees of a separation deed, on the death of the sole trustee, it was objected that the deed was void, in consequence of the father's thereby abandoning his right to the custody of his children. The ct. declined on this occasion deciding as to its validity, but appointed new trustees to protect the property.—Re MATTHEWS (1859), 26 Beav. 463; 28 L. J. Ch. 295; 32 L. T. O. S. 289; 5 Jur. N. 1908. Provisions separated into two deeds.]—Pltf. & her husband, owing to unhappy differences, agreed to separate, the husband by a memorandum of agreement covenanting with trustees to settle £60 a year upon her for her life for her separate use. This annuity not being paid, pltf.'s mother brought an action against the husband for necessaries which she had supplied to pltf. & her children. A verdict was taken by consent, & the matters in dispute referred to arbitration. Under the award of the arbitrator a deed of separation was executed whereby, amongst other things, it was agreed that the wife should maintain & educate the children so long as the annuity of £60 a year was paid to her. There was also a proviso that if the husband & wife again cohabited the deed was to be void. By a deed of same date, & also made in pursuance of the award, an annuity of £60 was given to the wife for her separate use. The husband & the wife sometime afterwards cohabited for a few weeks, but again separated. The annuity not being paid, the wife filed a bill against the trustee, which the M.R. dismissed, he considering that the two deeds must be treated as one transaction, & that as the separation deed contained a clause, the maintenance of the children by the mother, contrary to public policy, both deeds were void:—Held: (1) the deed of settlement was independent of the deed of separation, & therefore the annuity of £60 was absolute; (2) the husband, by cohabiting again with his wife, had put an end to the agreement that she should maintain the children.—CROUCH v. WALLER (1859), 4 De G. & J. 302; 33 L. 1921. Agreement on compromise of legal proceedings—Proceedings for assault.]—(1) The ct. will decree specific performance of an agreement for separation between husband & wife, although the agreement was made on a compromise of indictments preferred by the wife against the husband & others, for assaults on her. It is not illegal to compromise indictments for a misdemeanour; secus, as to indictments for felony.

1923. —— Threatened proceedings.]—By post-nuptial settlement all the husband's property was vested in a trustee, in trust for the wife for life, for her separate use, but without power of anticipation, remainder to the husband absolutely; with a proviso, that if she should leave him on any account, except by his permission, or by reason of his breach of the laws against her, she should forfeit all interest under the settlement. Differences having arisen, articles of arrangement were agreed upon, by which the parties were to live separate & the wife was to have a fixed income, & a formal deed of separation was to be drawn up & executed. The husband threatened, unless this arrangement were carried out, to impeach the wife's interest under the settlement in various ways, & in particular it was clear that the whole of the premises were in his power, the settlement being voluntary, & that he might sell the whole to any purchaser for valuable consideration, & waste the proceeds:—Held: the arrangement was beneficial to the lady & ought to be carried out, the deed of separation to be settled, if necessary, by the judge.—SMITH v. SMITH (1854), 18 Jur. 1021.

1924. Separation in fact must take place.]—(1) Where a deed was made between husband, wife, & a trustee, providing a separate maintenance for the wife, & purporting to be made in contemplation of an immediate separation, but, in fact, no separation then took place, nor was intended to take place at that time:—Held: the deed was void.

(2) Semble: where, in pursuance of articles of separation securing a maintenance to the wife, she quits her husband's house against his wishes, & continues to live apart from him, although he is willing, & wishes to receive her back, & provide for her in his own house, he is not liable to be sued by tradesmen for debts contracted by her, even for necessaries.

(3) A deed providing for an immediate, &, in some cases, for a future separation of husband & wife, may be valid in law.—HINDLEY v. WESTMEATH (MARQUIS) (1827), 6 B. & C. 200; 9 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 351; 5 L. J. O. S. K. B. 115; 108 E. R. 427.

1925. ——.]—By a deed, which recited that B. & his wife had agreed to live apart from each other during the remainder of their lives "upon the terms & conditions thereinafter contained," B. covenanted with trustees to allow his wife to live separate, & settled a sum of money upon trust for his wife for her life, & for their children after her death, with a proviso that if B. & his wife should afterwards agree by writing under their hands, attested by two witnesses, to cohabit together, the income of the trust fund should be paid to B. during such cohabitation, & the trustees covenanted to indemnify B. against his wife's acts & engagements. No separation took place between B. & his wife:—Held: the deed was a separation deed & not a voluntary settlement, & as no separation took place it was wholly void.—BINDLEY v. MULLONEY (1869), L. 1926. Agreement for purpose of facilitating divorce.]—(1) A man, a native of England, married in England a woman, a native of France, & went to reside with her in France, where their children were born. Differences having arisen, the wife instituted a suit in England, where the husband was then residing, for a divorce, on the ground of cruelty & adultery, to which the husband filed a responsive allegation, & also caused a suit in Chancery to be instituted to obtain possession of the two youngest children, who had remained in France with their mother. The Lord Chancellor made an order for delivery of the children to their father, & a ct. in France made an order for carrying it out. The wife appealed against both orders. An agreement was then signed by the wife in France, & by the husband in England, by which it was stipulated that the youngest child should be left with the mother; that the wife's appeals should be abandoned, & also her suit for a divorce, & that she would facilitate the husband's proceedings for a divorce, & that the husband would pay her an annuity & allow her access to all her children. The wife abandoned her appeals & her suit for a divorce, & the husband's responsive allegation was also dismissed. The wife filed a bill to obtain access to her children, & to have the annuity paid her:—Held: assuming the agreement to be one which was to be judged of by French law, & that it was valid by French law, it would not be enforced here, inasmuch as the stipulations that the youngest child should, in contravention of the order of the Lord Chancellor, be delivered to his mother, & that the wife would facilitate the husband's proceedings for a divorce, were contrary to the laws & policy of England.

Qu.: whether a gift of an annuity to the separate use of a married woman on condition of her living apart from her husband is good.

This is not only a deed contemplating a separation to commence at a future time, but it also endeavours to avoid the effect of that doctrine, by which it has been held that a deed of separation . . . shall be rendered void by any future reconciliation. . . . 1933. ——.]—HINDLEY v. WESTMEATH (MARQUIS), No. 1924, ante.

1934. ——.]—By a deed dated in 1817, after reciting that disputes had existed between W., & E., his wife, & that they had been on the point of separation, it was witnessed, that in consideration that the wife had consented to cohabit with the husband, he had covenanted with S., a trustee, to convey estates to his use, etc., for ninety-nine years, etc. The trusts of this term were, that in case the wife should find herself compelled by a renewal of the disputes, to cease to cohabit with her husband, or live apart from him, that a sufficient annuity for her separate maintenance should be raised out of the rents, or by sale or mtge. of the term; & in that event the husband agreed to execute articles of separation. The deed contained no covenant by the trustee, indemnifying the husband against the debts of the wife. After the execution of this deed, the husband & wife continued to live together. By an indenture in 1818, made between the husband & wife & trustees, after reciting that the husband, at the desire of the wife, had agreed to live separate & apart from her, & to allow her a separate maintenance, the husband demised the estate to trustees for a term, to raise provisions for the wife & an infant daughter; & the husband covenanted that the wife might live separate & apart from him, & free from his authority & control, etc. This deed contained no indemnity against debts. The parties continued to live in the same house, although they slept in separate rooms, & met at board, & appeared in the world as man & wife until June, 1819, when they finally separated. In 1822, the trustees in the deed of 1818, distrained upon the tenants of the land charged with the annuity to the wife. Upon bill filed in equity & appeal:—Held: the deeds were void; the first, as providing for a prospective separation; & the second, because there was a reconciliation.—WESTMEATH (MARQUIS) v. SALISBURY (MARQUIS) (1831), 5 Bli. 1935. ——.]—Any agreement made before or after marriage, which contemplates a voluntary separation of husband & wife, is void as contrary to the policy of the law.

By an ante-nuptial settlement property of the husband was limited during the joint lives of himself & wife, "if she should so long continue to live with him, & should not live separate & apart from him through any fault of her own," in trust for the separate use of the wife, without power of anticipation; & after the decease of either, "or in the event of the wife living separate & apart from her husband through any such fault," for the survivor, or for the husband, as the case might be; & after the death of the survivor, "or in the event of the wife living separate & apart from her husband through any such fault as aforesaid," for the children of the marriage:—Held: the limitations over upon the separation of the wife & husband were void as contrary to the policy of the law; for such a limitation in favour of the husband, if valid, would be a direct inducement to permit a state of separation, capriciously commenced by the wife, to continue.—H. v. W. 1937. —— Subsequent confirmatory agreement.]—Wife's petition for restitution of conjugal rights. The husband pleaded agreement that the parties might live apart. The agreement produced was signed before the marriage ceremony, & provided that the parties might at all times after the marriage live separate & apart. This purported to be confirmed by an indorsed agreement signed by both parties immediately after the ceremony. The confirming agreement was indorsed upon the first agreement before the marriage, & the parties had at the same time agreed to execute it after the marriage:—Held: the two documents formed only one agreement, &, their object being against public policy, the agreement was void & afforded no defence to the wife's petition. The first document being void could not be confirmed by the second.—BRODIE v. BRODIE, [1917] P. 271; 86 L. J. P. 140; 117 L. T. 542; 33 T. L. R. 525; 62 Sol. Jo. 71.

1938. —— Proviso in settlement—Ante-nuptial settlement.]—By articles before marriage, the husband covenanted to settle an annuity on the wife after marriage to be paid in the event of his death or any separation taking place:—Held: such a covenant was contrary to public policy & morality, & could not be enforced by a ct. of equity.—COCKSEDGE v. COCKSEDGE (1844), 14 Sim. 244; 13 L. On a bill filed by pltf., by her next friend, seeking to set aside the settlement, on the ground (inter alia) that it contained a proviso defeating her interest under it in the event of her separating from her husband, & calling upon him to allow her alimony:—Held: the proviso was bad, & must be declared void; but there was no pretence for setting aside the settlement, & the bill was ordered to be dismissed with costs, to be paid by the next friend, excepting so much as related to the proviso.—MERRYWEATHER v. JONES (1864), 4 Giff. 509; 10 L. B. In Reconciliation Agreements.

1942. Whether valid.]—Husband & wife, who were separated, entered into an agreement in writing, providing for their living together again, & stipulating that, in the event of a future separation for a particular cause, the wife should receive the income of her own fortune, which her husband was entitled to receive, & that her mother should indemnify him against her debts. They afterwards separated, for the cause referred to by the agreement, & the wife obtained a divorce in the Ecclesiastical Ct., & a sentence for permanent alimony to an amount exceeding the income of her fortune. That alimony was regularly paid by the husband, & he received the income of her fortune. The wife accepted a bill of exchange in favour of a creditor of her own. In a suit by that creditor, an injunction was granted to restrain the husband from paying to the wife the annual amount of the income of her fortune, as the validity of the agreement for future separation, under which she was entitled to such income, was not in dispute between the husband & wife. Qu.: whether such an agreement as equity will support.—HOARE v. HOARE (1790), 2 Ridg. Pltf. returned to live with deft., who again assaulted her, whereupon she obtained a further separation order from the justices. 1946. Whether separation deed affected—Marriage with deceased wife's sister—Annuity to wife—Proviso for reconciliation.]—A man went through the ceremony of marriage with a sister of his deceased wife, & lived with her as his wife. They afterwards separated, & a separation deed in the ordinary form was executed, in which she was described as his wife, & he covenanted with the trustees of the deed to pay her an annuity for their joint lives. There was a proviso that, if the parties should live together again by mutual consent, the deed should become void. The annuity was paid for twelve years, & then the man became bkrpt.:—Held: as the parties never could legally live together as husband & wife, the proviso, making the deed void in the event of their doing so, must be disregarded.—Re WOOD, Ex p. NADEN (1874), 9 Ch. 1950. Sufficiency of—As between husband & wife.]—Lord R. by will gave an annuity of £50 to pltf., who afterwards, in 1726, married deft. F.; in 1728 they agreed to part; by a deed of separation, the husband covenanted to allow her £14 per annum out of his own estate, & £24 more, to be paid quarterly, out of the annuity of £50, & £12 a year to his daughter, by pltf., for her maintenance, to be paid quarterly. The bill is brought against the husband, & S., a creditor of his, since the execution of the deed of separate maintenance, to have the trusts of that deed performed. Decreed according to the prayer of the bill as against the husband; & as to S., that he should not release his claim upon the annuity, till the pltf. had paid him his debt.—FITZER v. FITZER (1743), 2 Atk. 511; 26 E. PART XI. SECT. 2.

1950 i. Sufficiency of—As between husband & wife.]—Pltf. claimed the enforcement of parol agreement by her husband to pay her maintenance alleged to have been made shortly before a divorce suit between the parties which was undefended & in which the husband obtained a decree. The wife alleged that the promise was made in consideration of her undertaking to make no claims for alimony or maintenance in the divorce proceedings:—Held: as a claim for alimony in the divorce suit could not have been advanced with any hope of success, either the real object of the agreement was apparently to facilitate the divorce proceedings, in which case it would have been illegal & void, or it was mere gratuity by the husband, & the agreement was void as being made without consideration.—HALDANE v. HALDANE, [1921] N. Z. L. R. 612.—N.Z.

to indemnify the husband, or other valuable consideration, is not on that account void.

On the separation between a husband & wife, the former by deed made between himself, his wife, & trustees, assigned the dividends of some funds standing in the names of trustees to other trustees, for the benefit of the wife, & he covenanted that she might live apart from him, etc.; & the wife agreed to accept the provision in lieu of alimony, dower, etc.; & to exonerate her husband from all her debts, & to forfeit her rights under the deed if she violated the agreement. The deed contained no covenant on the part of the trustees, & was supported by no further consideration:—Held: the deed was not invalid, & the wife was entitled to the provision made for her by the deed.

(2) Such an agreement may be waived or abandoned by the conduct of the parties, as if they live together again.

Conceiving the deed to be valid, I have considered the admitted facts & the correspondence, with the view to the question whether the deed was subsequently waived or abandoned. . . . The separation remained, the wife performed the species of condition imposed upon her by her husband, & although no hostility remained, & a correspondence by letter, which, under the circumstances, must be considered as creditable to both parties, took place, in the latter part of F.'s [the husband's] life, there was no change in the circumstances, under which the deed was executed, & no waiver or abandonment; & I am therefore of opinion, that pltf. is entitled to the relief which she asks (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.).—FRAMPTON v. FRAMPTON (1841), 4 Beav. 287; 5 Jur. 980; 49 E. 1954. ——— ——— Agreement voluntary on part of husband.]—A husband, upon a treaty for separation from his wife, agreed with a trustee to pay his wife an annuity for her separate use, & also, during their separation, to permit their daughter, then an infant, but now of age, to reside with, & be under the control of, & educated & supported by, her mother; in consideration whereof the wife, who was entitled under her marriage settlement to property settled to her separate use without power of anticipation, agreed with the same trustee to indemnify her husband in respect of any debt on her own account or on account of their daughter. The trustee declining to enforce payment of arrears of the last-mentioned annuity, or to act any longer as trustee:—Held: (1) this was a voluntary agreement on the part of the husband, no consideration moving from the trustee by way of indemnity or otherwise, & the wife having no power to contract so as to bind property as to which, though settled to her separate use, she was restrained from anticipation; (2) the agreement being voluntary on the part of the husband, the ct. could not decree specific performance of it by him, or order him to account in respect of arrears; nor could it appoint a new trustee in the only mode in which a trustee could be effectually appointed, viz., by ordering the husband to enter into a new covenant with the new trustee; (3) there being nothing to implicate the trustee in any concurrence with the husband to avoid payment of the annuity, the ct. could not, under the prayer for general relief, direct that the wife should be at liberty to sue in the name of her trustee upon giving him a proper indemnity.

(4) Semble: the stipulation relative to the daughter being contrary to the policy of the law, no action on the agreement would lie; & the circumstance of the daughter's having since attained twenty-one would not affect the question.—WALROND v. WALROND (1858), John. 18; 28 L. 1968. —— ——.]—Twenty years after the marriage of A. & B., & when they had three children living, a deed of arrangement was executed by them respectively, by which B. the wife was to have paid to her annually out of A.'s estate conveyed to trustees certain pin money, & also a sum of money as the means of maintaining an establishment, which was to be for her separate use, independent of A., & so much thereof as B. should desire to expend was to be applied by her in a particular manner, leaving the remainder of it, if any, for A. The establishment was to be for B. & for the accommodation of her children, enabling her husband to partake of it. Previously to the execution of the deed a suit had been instituted by B., for a divorce from A. for cruelty, & same was pending at the date of the deed. The discontinuance of the suit, the prevention of disputes, & the waiver by B. against A. of other proceedings then in contemplation, for the purpose of obtaining a proper provision for B. & her children, were the considerations for the deed. A. was entitled to estates, yielding an income exceeding the amount of that granted to the trustees in favour of B. That it was further agreed that if resp. committed a breach of the agreement petitioner should be entitled to proceed in this ct. for a declaration of nullity. Averment—that there had been no breach of the agreement on the part of resp. :—Held : resp.'s agreement not to sue was a sufficient consideration for the husband's engagement to do the like, & such an agreement although not by deed was therefore a bar to a petition for declaration of nullity.—ALDRIDGE v. ALDRIDGE (OTHERWISE MORTON) (1888), 13 P. 1980. —— —— Consideration implied from recitals.]—By a separation deed, after reciting that the husband & wife had agreed to live apart, the husband assigned certain leaseholds to trustees in trust to pay the rents to the wife for life, & then to sell & hold the proceeds, in the events which happened, in trust for himself, & he covenanted to make up the wife's income to £300 a year. The deed contained a proviso for determination in the event of the wife seeking to resume cohabitation, but it contained no covenant by the wife to live apart. The husband paid nothing under the covenant, & in 1868 he was adjudicated a bkpt. The trustees proved for arrears due down to the date of the bkpcy., but there were further arrears due to them since that date. 1981. Effect of — Deed unenforceable.]—By deed of three parts between husband, wife, & trustee, reciting that differences existed, & that the husband & wife had agreed to live separate, the husband covenanted to pay to the trustee an annuity for the separate maintenance of the wife. The trustee having sued the husband for arrears of the annuity, the latter pleaded that he was induced to make the deed by means of false & fraudulent misrepresentations made by pltf. to him, i.e., by pltf., before the making of the deed, falsely & fraudulently representing to him that E., the wife, was a virtuous person, whereas in truth the said E. was not a virtuous person, & pltf. "had then carnally known the said E., so then being the wife of deft., & subsequently to the intermarriage of the said E. & deft., & before the making of the deed," which last-mentioned facts pltf. concealed from deft., & induced him to make the deed, in order that pltf. might continue an adulterous intercourse with the said E. At the trial, the plea was proved, & the verdict thereon entered for deft. On motion to enter judgment for pltf. non obstante veredicto :— Held : (1) although the plea did not show that the representations set out were necessarily fraudulent, it not being alleged that pltf. knew them to be false, or that he knew that E. was deft.'s wife at the time he had intercourse with her, yet it might be sustained as a general plea of fraud, which, after verdict, was a good answer to the action; (2) it was not necessary to allege that the wife, as cestui que trust, was a party to the fraud upon deft., as a ct. of law can only look to the legal rights of the parties to the deed.

(3) Semble : if pltf., intending to deceive deft. for pltf.'s own advantage & deft.'s disadvantage, induced the latter to make the deed by representing a fact to be true which was not true, but about which pltf. knew nothing, that would amount to fraud, & avoid the deed.—EVANS v. EDMONDS (1853), 13 C. 1983. —— ——.]—By a deed of separation between husband & wife, it was provided that no proceedings should be taken by either party with respect to any cause of complaint then existing, or which had arisen before the deed, & every offence committed by either party should be considered as, & the same was thereby, condoned. The husband, who alleged that he became a party to this deed in consequence of repeated protestations of his wife's innocence, discovered that she had, previous to the execution of the deed, been guilty of adultery, &, on the ground of fraudulent concealment, presented a petition to the Divorce Ct., for dissolution of marriage for adultery. The wife then filed a bill to restrain the divorce suit, on the ground that the deed was a complete bar to it, & moved for an injunction:—Held: the deed was procured by fraud, & therefore could not stand; it could be pleaded in the Divorce Ct.; & motion refused with costs.—BROWN v. BROWN (1868), L. 1984. —— Action of rescission maintainable.]—In 1910 a deed of separation was executed by a husband & wife under which the husband agreed to pay to the wife during her life or until she should marry again the annual sum of £500, & the wife agreed to maintain herself & to keep indemnified the husband against her debts & torts, & not to take proceedings for restitution of conjugal rights nor for the divorce or conjugal separation in respect of any previous marital offence; & it was also agreed that all letters between the parties should be destroyed. The letters were accordingly destroyed & the husband paid his wife the £500 a year. In 1915 the wife brought an action against the husband claiming to have the deed rescinded upon the ground that she had been induced to execute it by his false fraudulent representations & concealment as to his means:—Held: before Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), such a claim was maintainable; the wife in claiming the relief was not suing her husband for a tort within sect. 12 of the Act; & therefore the Act had not taken away her right to maintain the action.

The ct. ordered the deed to be rescinded though the letters had been destroyed & could not be restored to the respective parties, & refused to make it a condition of rescission that the wife should repay to the husband the annual sums of £500 which he had paid to her under the deed, the husband having received corresponding benefits under the deed.—HULTON v. HULTON, [1917] 1 K. 2012. Effect of agreement—Parties continue in state of cohabitation—3 Geo. 4, c. 75.]—Married persons separating, by mere voluntary agreement, without any legal sanction, are still, in the eye of the law, in a state of matrimonial cohabitation, how locally situate soever ; & upon what terms soever of matrimonial intercourse. The actual separation of the parties, in this case, was without any reference, apparently, to doubts entertained by both, or either, as to the legal validity of their marriage. On the contrary, they separate, by virtue, to some extent, of a deed, in which the party proceeded against, is expressly recognised as the wife of the party proceeding, in this suit, & by which a separate maintenance is provided for her, expressly in that character. It is, in short, just such a mere separation as might have taken place between the parties, had their marriage not been faulty in its original construction, had the husband, for instance, been a major at that time ; or, being a minor, had his father's consent been obtained ; or had this, lastly, been a marriage had, or celebrated, in virtue of banns duly published. Accordingly, their separation is one to which the law, as administered in these cts., can be no party, it is a separation, in short, to which it can give no heed, & can show no countenance. Under these circumstances, admitting it to be proved that these parties were not actually cohabiting up to the time of the passing of above Act ; still, in my judgment, they did "continue to live together as husband & wife," in legal construction, within its true intent & meaning, up to that time, sufficiently to bring the marriage within the retrospective provisions of that Act. The retrospective provisions of that Act, if applicable to, clearly rendering this a good & valid marriage, I am bound, as deeming them so applicable, to withhold the declaratory sentence of its nullity, now prayed by the husband (SIR CHRISTOPHER ROBINSON).—KING v. SANSOM (OTHERWISE KING) (1826), 3 Add. 277 ; 162 E. q. What amounts to molestation—Proceedings for divorce.]—A covenant by a husband in a separation agreement "not to molest or interfere in any way whatsoever" with his wife, is not broken by his taking proceedings for divorce ; & he may in such proceedings set up a release in the separation agreement as a bar to her claim for alimony or interim alimony.—KUHLER v.

(2) Another point was raised, founded on the use of the word "annoy" in the wife's covenant; but I cannot distinguish that word from "molest," & it is clear from Fearon v. Aylesford (Earl), No. 2019, post, that adultery is not molestation within the meaning of such a covenant as this (MATHEW, J.).—SWEET v. SWEET, [1895] 1 Q. B. 12; 64 L. J. Q. B. 108; 71 L. T. 672; 59 J. P. 373; 43 W. R. 303; 15 R. 146, D. C.

2019. What amounts to molestation—Necessity for intent to annoy.]—(1) In a separation deed a covenant by which the husband undertakes to pay his wife an annuity without restricting his liability to such time as she shall be chaste is good & is not against public policy, & the covenant remains in force & the annuity continues payable, although the wife afterwards commits adultery.

(2) Semble: if the covenant had been inserted in the separation deed with the intent that the wife might be at liberty to commit adultery, the deed would have been void.

(3) Covenants in a separation deed, by which respectively the husband has covenanted to pay an annuity to a trustee for the wife & the trustee has covenanted that the wife shall not molest the husband, must be construed as independent covenants in the absence of any express terms making them dependent; & therefore a breach of the covenant that a wife shall not molest the husband is not an answer to an action for the annuity.

(4) Neither adultery alone by the wife, nor adultery by her followed by the birth of a spurious child, is a breach of a covenant in a separation deed against molestation by the wife.

(5) Semble: adultery by the wife followed by the birth of a spurious child whom she puts forward as the child of her husband, especially if this is done with intent to claim a title or property to which the legitimate offspring of her husband would be entitled, is evidence of a breach of a covenant against molestation by her.

(6) In order to constitute a breach of a covenant in a separation deed against molestation by a wife some act must be done by her or by the authority with intent to annoy her husband, & which is in fact an annoyance to him or at least some act must be done by her or by her authority with a knowledge that it must of itself without more annoy her husband or annoy a husband with reasonable & proper feeling.

There was a proviso that, in case the husband should at any time thereafter obtain a decree absolute for a divorce against the wife in respect of any circumstances occurring after the date of the deed, or in case the wife should at any time thereafter be proved to be leading a notoriously unchaste life, the annuity should absolutely cease & determine:—Held: the separate use continued only during the joint-lives of husband & wife, & arrears of the annuity remaining unpaid at the date of the husband's death are not separate property of the wife.—STOGDON v. LEE, [1891] 1 Q. 2041. —— Upon notice—Construction of deed.]—A deed of separation was executed in 1894 by resp. & his wife, the former covenanting to pay to a trustee thereunder an annuity for the separate use of the latter without power of anticipation. Power was reserved to resp. to give notice to the trustee after the expiration of twelve months from the date of the deed of his intention to pay a reduced amount, in which case, unless all the parties agreed as to the amount to be thereafter paid, the covenants in the deed should be void & of no further effect. Before the expiration of twelve months notice of such intention was given to the wife's solrs., & the wife instructed them to waive the stipulated notice to the trustee. In an action brought in 1904 to recover all arrears of annuity due under the deed as a still subsisting arrangement, the Supreme Ct. of the Colony decreed the amount, holding that the wife's waiver of notice to the trustee was in contravention of the restraint clause in the deed:—Held: the High Ct. rightly reversed this decree. On the true construction of the deed the restraint clause applied to the annuity so long as it was payable, but not to the notice. Personal service thereof on the trustee was a mere formality which the wife was entitled to waive. Otherwise it was inequitable that she should enforce an obligation from which she had induced her husband to omit to free himself in the manner stipulated.—MACNAGHTEN v. PATERSON, [1907] A. The wife was, out of that sum, to keep up an establishment for herself & children upon such a scale as she should think fit; & the husband was to have the benefit of it under certain restrictions. But if she should not require the whole for the purposes aforesaid, the surplus was to be paid to the husband:—Held: (1) so long as she kept up the establishment, she was not liable to account for the surplus in her hands; (2) this was like the case of guardians of infants & committees of lunatics having allowances made to them for maintenance, & who are not accountable for their expenditure, so long as they properly maintain those committed to their care.—JODRELL v. JODRELL (1851), 14 Beav. 397; 51 E. Covenant by husband to maintain—Extent of liability—Construction of covenant.]—In a deed of separation there was the following covenant by deft. the father of the children therein named: That, for providing for maintenance of the children he would out of his own moneys pay the whole expense of their education, maintenance & support except as thereinafter mentioned, all of whom, it was agreed, should be & remain in the custody & under complete control of deft. Then followed a proviso, that the mother of the children, or her trustees, should pay the expense of the education, maintenance & support of such of the children as should from time to time be permitted by deft. to reside with the mother during the period of such residence:—Held: the covenant by deft. to maintain was general, & not limited to the minority of the children, or to the period of their remaining under his control & custody.—DE CRESPIGNY v. DE CRESPIGNY (1853), 9 Exch. 192; 2 C. Afterwards the son obtained admission to Christ's Hospital, where he was maintained & educated at very small expense to his mother. Under an originating summons an order was made by consent that the son should spend half his holidays with his father & half with his mother:—Held: the husband was not relieved under those circumstances from continuing to pay to the wife the weekly sum covenanted by him to be paid so long as their son should remain under the age of twenty-one, & should reside with or under the tutelage & care of the wife.—ROWELL v. ROWELL (1903), 89 L. In 1884 he was ordered to Egypt & proposed to take the first & third of the children with him. Mrs. H. applied for an injunction to restrain him from doing so:—Held: the covenant did not bind H. to keep the children in a place where Mrs. H. could conveniently have access to them, & did not preclude him from taking them with him to any place where he might be ordered in the course of his duties, & the injunction must be dissolved, there being no case made that he was removing them for the purpose of preventing Mrs. H. from having access to them.—HUNT v. HUNT (1884), 28 Ch. 2065. —— Covenant by wife to receive annuity in satisfaction—Wife not deprived of share in personalty.]—Husband & wife having agreed to live apart from each other, a sum of stock was invested in the name of trustees, &, by a separation deed, containing the usual provisions, the husband agreed to pay to his wife, for her maintenance, an annuity of £180 a year, & it was declared that the stock was intended as a security for the payment of that annuity. The deed contained a proviso that the husband should be indemnified out of the annuity against the debts & contracts of his wife, & all dower & thirds at common law or by custom, which she, at any time thereafter, might claim, challenge, or demand from, out of, or against her husband, or his present or future estate, real or personal; & an agreement that the wife should make & execute all such acts, deeds, & matters as should be requisite for the purpose of releasing, barring, or extinguishing all dower or thirds at the common law, or by custom, which she could or might claim or demand in, to, or out of any real or personal estate of her husband. 2066. Jointure—Under deed of arrangement—Whether affected by deed of separation.]—By articles of separation, dated in June 1834, deft. agreed that he would, on or before Feb. 1, 1835, effectually, by a charge on freehold estates, or by investment of an adequate sum of money, or by the best means which might be then in his power, secure to pltf., his wife, an annuity of £1,000. In Dec. 1834, a deed of arrangement was executed between deft. & his son, by which certain family estates were conveyed to trustees to raise money for the payment of various incumbrances, afterwards to such uses as deft. & his son should appoint, & in default of appointment to deft. for life, & then to his son absolutely, with a power for deft. to jointure his then present or any future wife to the extent of £1,000 per annum:—Held: pltf. was entitled to have her jointure raised out

(1) action for specific performance of such a covenant would lie in a case where there were trustees, but only where the ct. approved of the covenant as being for the benefit of the child; (2) it was doubtful before Married Women's Property Act, 1908, whether an action on a deed between husband & wife without the intervention of trustees (not being an application under Infants Act, 1908) would lie at all, & that Act has made no difference where no question of property arises.—BAIGENT v. BAIGENT, [1920] N. Z. L. R. 227.—N.Z.

h. — —.]—A deed of separation was executed by which it was agreed that the husband should make the wife a weekly allowance while she remained chaste, & the custody of the child was by deed given to the mother. After the separation the wife gave birth to an illegitimate child, & the husband obtained a decree nisi for a divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery, but no order was made as to the custody of the child who still remained with her mother. The husband then applied to the ct. for a writ of habeas corpus directed to the mother in respect of the child:—Held: although by the deed of separation the legal custody of the child was given to the mother, yet it was the duty of the ct., in deciding as to whom the custody of the child was to be given, to consider whether for the benefit of the infant the deed of separation should not be signed, & that no reason had been shown why the custody of the father should be interfered with.

(2) In any case the deed of separation had become void by the breach on the part of the wife of the provisions of the dum casta clause therein contained, & the father was therefore legally entitled to the custody of the child.—SALAMAN v. SALAMAN, [1923] N. Z. L. R. 454.—

A., by will, subsequently gave certain specific property to trustees to pay out of the rents an annuity of £52 to his wife generally, on the same special quarterly days:—Held: there being no direction in the will to pay debts & legacies, & no expressions of a contrary intention, the general rule must prevail, that the annuity given by the will was in satisfaction of the annuity covenanted to be paid by the deed of separation; & the widow was put to her election.—ATKINSON v. LITTLEWOOD (1874), L. By his will, dated Sept. 5, 1844, but alleged to have been signed on Sept. 9, "after all my just debts, funeral & testamentary expenses are paid, I bequeath to my wife £100 payable within six months after my decease, £6 to be paid to her or her order until my estate is finally settled, the same to be deducted from the said £100 as per indenture stated in our mutual separation":—Held: the legacy was not in satisfaction of the sum covenanted by the deed to be paid, but the widow was entitled to both sums.

The circumstance that two documents are contemporaneous so that both are present to the mind of the donor when he executes each of them, is a strong reason against holding a gift in one to be a satisfaction of an obligation under the other to pay a like sum.—HORLOCK v. WIGGINS, WIGGINS v. HORLOCK (1888), 39 Ch. 2080. —— —— Particulars.]—In an action by a wife for arrears of an annuity the husband claimed that the deed of separation under which the annuity was payable should be cancelled having, as he alleged, been obtained by fraudulent concealment of the previous adultery of the wife with F. No particulars of acts of adultery were pleaded. The judge found that the adultery was not proved. In a subsequent action for further arrears the husband raised the same plea, again giving no particulars of acts of adultery. It was stated by counsel & on affidavit that fresh alleged acts of adultery with F., also committed before the execution of the deed, but discovered since the first action, would be relied on. The county ct. judge, without hearing evidence, held that the issue of adultery was res judicata, & refused to try it:—Held: inasmuch as the issue in the first action was, in the absence of particulars of adultery, such acts of adultery as should appear in evidence, & in the second action, again in the absence of particulars, such acts as should similarly appear, the matter was not necessarily res judicata, & the case must go back for a new trial to ascertain the nature of the present allegations of adultery.—ORD v. ORD, [1923] 2 K. SUB-SECT. 12.—EFFECT OF SUBSEQUENT MISCONDUCT OF HUSBAND.

2083. Covenant by wife not to claim further maintenance—Whether valid.]—Notwithstanding that by an agreement for separation, made between a husband & wife on withdrawal of the wife's petition for divorce, the wife has agreed to accept from the husband a specified sum for maintenance, to be paid in any event whether the marriage should thereafter be dissolved or not, the ct. has power under Divorce Acts, after a decree for dissolution on a fresh petition by the wife based on misconduct of the husband since the agreement, to disregard the agreement & order permanent alimony to be paid to her at a rate exceeding the amount specified in the agreement, if the husband's means on inquiry permit: at all events, if the agreement does not contain an express covenant by the wife not to sue for increased alimony in the event of a divorce grounded on future misconduct of the husband. Qu.: whether such a covenant is valid.

Again, when by a separation deed the wife has agreed to accept a specified sum for maintenance, the deed to become void if the marriage is afterwards "dissolved" for any future misconduct by either party, the ct. has a similar power to order the payment of permanent alimony to the wife after a decree for judicial separation by reason of the husband's misconduct since the execution of the deed, if there has been such an alteration of circumstances as renders it unjust that the wife should be bound by the deed.—BISHOP v. BISHOP, JUDKINS v. JUDKINS, [1897] P. 138; 66 L. an order that she should have the custody of the two youngest children. The husband had since the date of the separation deed become wealthy, & the wife applied for an inquiry as to his means with a view to obtaining increased alimony:—Held: increased alimony could not be ordered, for that as the ct. had not, as it would have had in the case of a decree for dissolution, power to alter the separation deed, the covenant by the wife not to sue for increased alimony was binding on her, & must have effect given to it, the husband not having, in the opinion of the ct., been guilty of such misconduct as under the circumstances of the case would disentitle him to claim the benefit of the deed.

In my opinion, the conduct of the husband since the deed is not such as, having regard to what was known to the wife at the time she entered into the deed, can disentitle him from relying on the deed. I put it that way, because I quite agree with the Master of the Rolls, that we ought not to say, & I do not entertain the opinion, that there can be no misconduct on the part of a husband such as would disentitle him to set up a deed of separation of this kind when the wife is making an application for an increased allowance. The case of Morrall v. Morrall, No. 2081, ante, one of the cases referred to by the judge, as leading to the conclusion at which he arrived, is an instance. There, there was a deed of separation with a provision as to what maintenance the wife was to have. She subsequently ascertained that the husband was living in incestuous adultery. It may well be that such gross misconduct, misconduct of a nature so entirely different from that which the parties were providing for when they entered into the deed of separation, might prevent the husband from in any way relying on that deed, & might render it just that the bargain made by the wife for maintenance should be disregarded on an application to the Ct. for alimony. Here, in my opinion, the circumstances are not such as to entitle the wife to disregard her bargain (COTTON, L.J.).—GANDY v. GANDY (1882), 7 P. D. 168; 51 L. J. P. 41; 46 L. T. 607; 30 W. SECT. 7.—BREACH OF CONTRACT.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

2090. Breach must be substantial—To bar enforcement of deed.]—(1) Where a deed of separation had been executed between a husband & wife who had continued to live apart, & the wife more than five years afterwards, by counterclaim to an action by the husband to enforce the deed, claimed as against him a judicial separation on the ground of alleged cruelty:—Held: her right to judicial separation was barred by lapse of time & by the execution of the deed of separation.

(2) A married woman can contract to live apart from her husband & the husband is entitled to come to the ct. to enforce specific performance of such a contract.

(3) A husband is not debarred from enforcing a deed of separation & from obtaining an order restraining his wife from commencing an action for the restitution of conjugal rights by reason of trifling breaches of the covenants on his part.

(4) Where, in a separation deed, the husband had covenanted to allow an infant child to reside with the wife, & had subsequently concurred as next friend of the infant in a petition under Infants' Custody Act, 1873 (c. 12), for the removal of the infant from the wife's custody which had been ordered by the ct.:—Held: this was not a breach of the husband's covenant.

(5) Injunction granted to restrain the wife from suing for restitution of conjugal rights.—BESANT v. WOOD (1879), 12 Ch. D. 605; 40 L. T. 445; 23 Sol. Jo. 443.

2091. —— Suit for restitution of conjugal rights—Deed pleaded in bar.]—It is not every breach of covenant in a deed of separation which will prevent the party committing it from setting up the deed in answer to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. To have this effect a breach must be substantial, serious, & deliberate.

In a case where the only breach consisted in the fact that the husband was four days late in paying a weekly allowance payable to his wife under a deed of separation:—Held: the deed was a complete answer to the wife's petition for conjugal rights, & the ct. refused to make the usual order for the wife's costs.—KUNSKI v. KUNSKI (1898), 68 L. J. P. 18.

PART XI. SECT. 6, SUB-SECT. 12.

PART XI. SECT. 7, SUB-SECT. 1.

n. Covenants construed as independent.]—The covenants in a separation agreement are independent of each other, & a breach of a covenant on the one side will not exonerate the covenantor on the other side from the due performance of his covenant.—MARSHALL v. MARSHALL, [1923] 2

2092. Deed not pleaded in bar—Duty of court to investigate breaches.]—When there is in existence a deed of separation drawn up between the parties to a matrimonial cause & containing a covenant not to sue for restitution of conjugal rights it does not follow that the ct. will disregard the deed because a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights is undefended & that one of the parties does not appear & set it up as a bar to a decree. It is rather the duty of the ct. to inquire into the question of the breaches of the covenants of the deed, if there have been any, & should it appear that these breaches have been substantial, it will not allow itself to be bound by a deed which has been unfair in its provisions & useless to petitioner. The proper time for considering the effect of the deed is at the hearing of the suit for restitution, & not at the hearing of a subsequent suit arising out of resp.'s disobedience in refusing to comply with an order for restitution.

A husband & wife agreed to live apart, & a deed of separation was executed between them. The husband covenanted to pay his wife an allowance, & the wife on her part covenanted not to sue for restitution of conjugal rights. The payments were not kept up by the husband, & eventually he expressed his intention of not providing his wife with any means whatever. The wife thereupon brought a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. The suit was undefended:—Held: the ct. could & ought to take notice of the separation deed, even although it was not set up by the husband as a bar to granting a decree; but as the husband had by his conduct & his declared intention rendered the deed absolutely valueless to his wife, the ct. would not refuse to make an order in her favour.—KENNEDY v. KENNEDY, [1907] P. 49; 76 L. B. never executed the deed, but promised to do so, & on two occasions instructed an attorney to enforce the deed against the husband. B. (who survived A.) having died, the wife brought an action upon the deed in the name of the exors. of B. against her husband, the proceedings in which action were stayed by a judge's order; the ct., on the application of the wife, set aside the order upon payment of the costs of the application, & giving security to the exors. against the costs of the action, to the satisfaction of the master.—ARCHARD v. COULSTING (1843), 6 Man. & G. 75; 134 E. 2104. —— —— Trustee refusing to sue.]—A rule to set aside a writ of summons & subsequent proceedings had been obtained, on behalf of deft., on an affidavit that the action was commenced without the authority of pltf. It appeared, in answer, that the action was brought to recover from deft. arrears of maintenance money due to his wife under a deed of separation, of which pltf. was a trustee, but that she had refused to carry out the trusts of the deed, in collusion with deft., for the purpose of preventing the wife from obtaining payment of the arrears, &, having been informed that the action was brought in her name, had refused to sanction it, but without stating any reason for so doing. 2106. —— —— ——.]—(1) To entitle a third person, not named as a party to a contract, to sue either of the contracting parties, the third person must possess an actual beneficial right which places him in the position of cestui que trust under the contract. By a deed of separation between husband & wife, the husband covenanted with the trustees to pay to them an annuity for the use of the wife & two eldest daughters, & also to pay to the trustees all the expenses of the maintenance & education of the two youngest daughters, provided that the trustees permitted them to go to such school as the husband should direct, & provided also that the covenants by the trustees were duly observed & performed: provided, also, that the two youngest daughters should live at such place (being reasonable & proper for the purpose) as the husband should direct, & should be maintained & educated at his expense, the husband & wife to have all reasonable access to them. The trustees covenanted with the husband that they would, during the continuance of the separation, keep him indemnified against all liability for the maintenance of the wife & the two eldest daughters, & against all molestation by them, & that the wife would not take any proceedings against the husband for alimony, except as aforesaid; & that they, the trustees, would, on the husband defraying all the expenses connected therewith, carry out his desires as to the school at which the two youngest daughters should be educated, & the place at which they should live, & would permit them, if they so desired, & without any interference on the part of the wife, to accept any invitation of the husband to reside with him. On one of the two youngest daughters subsequently attaining sixteen, the husband refused any longer to maintain her, whereupon she brought an action, by her next friend, against the husband & the trustees of the separation deed to enforce the husband's covenant, the trustees having refused to allow their names to be used as pltf., & judgment was given for enforcing the covenant. On appeal: —Held: upon the construction of the deed, pltf. was not in the position of cestui que trust under the covenant so as to entitle her to maintain the action, but liberty was given to her under R. S. C., 1883, Order 16, r. 2, to amend the writ, by adding the trustees, the wife, & the other daughters, or any of them, as pltfs.

(2) The trustees refusing to be joined as co-pltfs., the statement of claim was amended by making the wife a co-pltf.:—Held: she had such an interest as entitled her to sue, the deed being an arrangement between the husband & wife, & the trustees being introduced on her behalf in order to get over the difficulty that the husband & wife could not at law sue each other, so that the trustees were to be considered trustees for the wife, & if they refused to sue she could sue in equity.

(3) After the separation deed the husband committed adultery, & a decree was made for judicial separation, giving the custody of the two youngest daughters to the wife. After this the wife applied for an increased alimony, which was granted by the President, but his decision was reversed on appeal, both the arguments & the judgment of the Ct. of Appeal proceeding on the footing (though the ct. did not expressly decide the point) that the husband remained liable under the deed to pay for the maintenance & education of the two youngest daughters. He now contended that his covenant was put an end to by the custody of the youngest daughters being given to his wife:—Held: he was not at liberty to retain the benefit of a decision given on the footing that his liability under the covenant continued, & at the same time to insist that his liability under it had determined, & the appeal was ordered to stand over, with liberty to the wife to apply to the Divorce Ct. for increased alimony, if she should be so advised.—GANDY v. GANDY (1885), 30 Ch. 2111. Husband domiciled abroad—At time of writ—Previous domicil in England.]—D. & his wife, Americans by origin, in 1897 came with their family to England, made it their permanent home, & acquired an English domicil. D. was connected with a banking business in America & in Paris. In Jan. 1913, they entered into a deed of separation, prepared in America by American lawyers & executed by D. in America & by his wife in England, by which they agreed to live apart, & D. covenanted, amongst other things, to pay his wife an allowance of $50,000 per annum, but no place for payment was stated. They continued to reside in England, each having a separate establishment, but in June, 1915, D. closed his establishment in England & went to Paris intending to acquire a French domicil & to institute divorce proceedings in the French Cts. so as to get rid of the separation deed. In July, 1915, the wife issued a writ against D. to enforce the provisions of the separation deed, & obtained leave under R. S. C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (e), to serve the writ on him in Paris on the ground that he was ordinarily resident in England. He entered a conditional appearance & moved to discharge the service of the writ upon him, alleging that he was not domiciled or ordinarily resident in England at the date of the issue of the writ, & that there had been no breach by him of any contract in the separation deed that came within rule 1 (e) of the Ord.:—Held: D. was not domiciled or ordinarily resident in England at the date of the issue of the writ; but his covenant to pay the allowance was a contract which came within rule 1 (e) for the breach of which the wife was entitled to sue in England, & his application

2114. ——.]—There is no doubt of the general jurisdiction of a ct. of equity to decree the specific performance of articles between husband & wife for a separation & a separate maintenance. But the ct. exercises its discretion in this case very cautiously, & will not give its assistance until it has seen whether from the circumstances of the case, there is or is not a probability of the parties being reconciled. A sentence in the Ecclesiastical Ct. for the restitution of conjugal rights, is a reason for this ct refusing to give its assistance in such a case; & in general if such an agreement is not fit to be enforced, the ct. will, on a cross bill, order it to be delivered up, though there may be cases in which no relief will be given to either party.—FLETCHER v. FLETCHER (1788), 2 Cox, Eq. 2118. Agreement in compromise of divorce proceedings.]—Pltf., Mrs. H., who was the wife of deft., claimed specific performance of an agreement for a separation deed entered into upon the compromise of a suit in the Divorce Ct. which was instituted by the husband against the wife for a divorce on the ground of adultery. The agreement was signed by both husband & wife, after the husband's evidence in support of his case had been heard & before the wife's defence had been commenced, & was in these terms: "Petition & answer dismissed. Deed of separation with usual covenants; costs of preparing deed to be borne by Mr. H. Mr. H. to pay Mrs. H. for herself & child or children £150 a year quarterly. Mrs. H. to maintain the child or children. Mr. H. to pay wife's costs. In case of difference in working out these terms, matter to be referred to W. & D." (the leading counsel on each side):—Held: (1) this ct. had power to enforce specific performance of an agreement for a separation deed & for the compromise of a suit in the Divorce Ct. without infringing Jud. Act prohibiting interference with proceedings pending in another branch of the ct.; (2) the ct. would not refuse specific performance of an agreement for a separation deed on the ground that it provided for the wife having the custody of the children; (3) husband & wife were competent to make a binding agreement for compromise of a divorce suit, & this agreement was not too vague to be enforced by the ct.; (4) a dum casta clause did not come within the term "usual covenants" in a separation deed agreed to as part of the terms of compromise of a divorce suit; (5) the ct. would construe the term "usual covenants" in reference to surrounding circumstances, but the adultery of the wife not having been proved could not form an element for the consideration of the ct.; (6) the agreement on the face of it being complete, the arbitration clause could only come into force in case of difference between the parties, & did not oust the jurisdiction of the ct. to settle the deed itself. Decree for specific performance; the deed of separation to be settled in Chambers if the parties differed, & no dum casta clause to be inserted.

(7) It is no answer to a suit for specific performance for deft. to say that though he understood what the words of the agreement were, he was under a mistake as to their legal effect.

(8) Sect. 2 of Infants' Custody Act, 1873 (c. 12), provides: "No agreement contained in any separation deed made between the father & mother of an infant or infants shall be held to be valid by reason only of its providing that the father of such infant or infants shall give up the custody or control thereof to the mother; provided always that no ct. shall enforce any such agreement if the ct. shall be of opinion that it will not be for the benefit of the infant or infants to give effect thereto." Surely the plain ordinary meaning of that clause is unmistakable. The deed is not to be invalid, nor is the particular clause in the deed giving up the custody of the children by the father to be invalid; but it is to be read as if there were inserted in it that this convention as to the custody of the children is subject to the power of the ct., as guardian of the infant children, to enforce or refuse to enforce that, according as the ct. may think the interests of the infant children require the enforcement or non-enforcement of that clause. Then, if in a deed of separation a covenant by the father to give the custody of the infant children to the mother is not of itself invalid, how can an agreement for a deed which is to contain such a covenant be invalid either? 2130. —— —— ——.]—The ct. will enforce a legal & proper covenant in a separation deed, although other covenants in the same deed may be illegal. By a separation deed, made after the wife had instituted proceedings in the Divorce Ct. for divorce & the custody of her children, the husband covenanted to deliver up forthwith to his wife all her journals, diaries, & private correspondence & memoranda; that the elder two children of the marriage should remain at such schools in England as the husband, or such schools elsewhere as the husband, with the consent of the wife, should direct; that the husband & wife should each have access to them at all reasonable & convenient times, subject to the regulations of the schools; & that their holidays should be passed by them at such places & in such manner as the trustees of the deed should direct; & that the younger two children (who were respectively under the age of seven years) should remain in the custody of the wife:—Held: having regard to the evidence with respect to the husband's misconduct, the covenants with respect to the holidays of the elder two children were reasonable & proper, & would be enforced by the ct., even if the covenant as to the custody of the younger children were not legal, as to which, however, the ct. expressed no opinion.—HAMILTON v. HECTOR (1872), L. R. 13 Eq. 511; 36 J. P. 676; previous proceedings (1871), 6 Ch. App. 701, L. C.

2131. —— Trustees not parties.]—An agreement was entered into between husband & wife, that proceedings on a petition by the wife for a divorce should be stayed, the parties having agreed to execute a separation deed, & petitioner being allowed to receive the whole of her income. The costs of the proceedings were agreed to be paid by petitioner, resp.'s attorney thereby agreeing to receive £150 in satisfaction of his costs, including the costs of the deed of separation. The income to which petitioner was entitled consisted of the rents of certain leasehold houses which had been bequeathed by will to two trustees upon trust to pay the income to petitioner for life, but not to her separate use. The agreement was signed by the husband & wife, but not by the trustees or by any other person. A separation deed was prepared, but the wife refused to execute it, whereupon a bill was filed by the husband against the wife & the trustees for specific performance of the agreement:—Held: the ct. could not deal with the question of costs except by consent, having regard to the subsequent dealings of the parties, & could not decree specific performance; bill dismissed, but without costs.

This bill has incurable defects. It prays for the specific performance of an agreement against all defts. Two of defts. have never signed the agreement & they both decline to be bound by it. That alone would be enough. The difficulty is upon the subsequent part of the agreement, which relates to costs of various kinds. As to this part of the agreement it is impossible for the ct. to decree specific performance, if the agreement were more intelligible than it is—for this reason, that subsequent to the agreement that all costs should be disposed of in a way which should be binding & irrevocable, things have been done by the parties which were not included in it (STUART, V.-C.).—BARNETT v. BARNETT (1861), 3 L. In an action by the wife for specific performance of the agreement:—Held: these provisions related to custody & not access, & it was beyond the powers of the counsel to insert them; & the ct. had power to settle the proper form of deed instead of referring it back.

(2) Semble: in an action for specific performance of an agreement to execute a separation deed, the ct. will not go into evidence whether the provisions agreed upon are for the benefit of the children.—EVERSHED v. EVERSHED (1882), 46 L. T. 690; 30 W. R. 732.

2137. —— ——.]—A separation deed was executed by a husband & wife whereby the husband covenanted to make an allowance to his wife, & a trustee, on behalf of the wife, covenanted that she would not sue for restitution of conjugal rights nor for alimony, & that she would not "molest, trouble, or disturb" her husband. The allowance was duly paid & received. The trustee became bkpt. Shortly after this, the wife presented petitions for restitution of conjugal rights & for alimony. A bill to restrain the wife from prosecuting these proceedings or doing any act to "molest, etc.," her husband, was then filed by him & on motion for injunction, an order was made restraining the wife from prosecuting her petition for alimony & from doing any act to "molest, etc.," her husband, but on the case coming on, upon motion for decree the ct. declined to grant a perpetual injunction, except so far as to restrain any application for alimony.—FLOWER v. FLOWER (1871), 25 L. 2138. —— Breach of covenant not to molest.]—Cts. of equity, recognising the validity of separation deeds, will enforce them.

By a separation deed, a husband covenanted with his wife's father, that his wife during her life, might live separate from him, that he would not sue her in the Ecclesiastical Ct. for living separate; that he would not molest, etc., her, nor claim any of her property; & her father covenanted with the husband to maintain her & indemnify him. Upon an infraction of the covenant, by the husband molesting his wife, he was restrained by injunction.—SANDERS v. RODWAY (1852), 16 Beav. 207; 22 L. J. Ch. 230; 20 L. T. O. 2139. —— ——.]—A suit for nullity of marriage had been instituted by the wife against her husband; an arrangement for a deed of separation was proposed, in order to stop it. An agreement was entered into by which the property of the parties was regulated, & by which their conduct in relation to each other was to be guided. One of the articles of this agreement stipulated that the husband should "permit the wife to live separate & apart from him, as if she were unmarried, without any molestation, interference, or annoyance whatsoever, by, or on the part of," the husband. By another article, it was declared that if he performed the covenants, etc., "he, his heirs, exors., etc., & their estates & effects, shall be indemnified from all the present debts & liabilities of" the husband, "by the joint & several covenant of" the trustees for the wife. A deed was to be drawn up in conformity with these articles, & on mutual execution of the deed the suit for nullity was to be withdrawn. On a bill by the wife to compel the husband specifically to perform this agreement, the judge made an order referring it to the master to approve of a proper deed to carry its provisions into effect. This order was confirmed on appeal to this House. Pending the appeal, the master approved of a deed containing a covenant by the husband not to institute any suit in the Ecclesiastical Ct. for restitution of conjugal rights, & another in which the trustees of the wife agreed to indemnify the husband "against the present & future debts of" the wife. Exceptions to this deed taken by the husband were overruled :—Held : (1) the subsequent order approving of the deed as drawn by the master must be supported; (2) the ct. was fully at liberty to examine the articles of agreement, & on finding in them a stipulation as to payment of debts, inconsistent with the rest of the articles, & insensible or absurd, to authorise the introduction into the deed of a covenant which would carry into effect the real intentions of the parties.

(3) Qu. : whether as a rule of equity the ct. could enforce by injunction a stipulation to live separate, or not to bring a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, though undoubtedly it could enforce stipulations as to an arrangement of property, & as to forbearance from personal molestation.

(4) One part of a decree was held to be sufficiently doubtful to justify an appeal against it; but as to another part of the same decree, applt. having sought to obtain a construction of articles of agreement, which he knew not to be justified by circumstances, the appeal, being dismissed, was dismissed with costs.

(5) It is a settled point of law that a contract for separation is a valid contract, & the agreement to enter into a covenant not to molest the wife, & to allow her to live as a feme sole is a perfectly legal covenant, & would be, & ought to be, as it has been, enforced by the ct. (LORD ST. LEONARDS).

(6) Applt. cannot imagine that if he had entered into a covenant in precisely the terms of the contract, he could have gone into the Ecclesiastical Ct. for a restitution of conjugal rights, without breaking that covenant (LORD ST. LEONARDS).—WILSON v. WILSON (1854), 5 H. L. Cas. 40; 23 L. J. Ch. 697; 23 L. T. O. S. 134; 10 E. R. 811, H. L.; previous proceedings (1848), 1 H. L. Cas. 538, H. L.

indemnified him against her debts, that he would not compel or endeavour to compel her to cohabit or live with him by any legal proceedings, or otherwise howsoever:—Held: by the master of the Rolls, upon a bill filed by the wife & her trustees, she was not entitled to an injunction to restrain the husband from proceeding in a suit he had commenced in the Divorce & Matrimonial Ct. to obtain a restitution of conjugal rights, etc.; but this decision was reversed, upon appeal, & the injunction was granted.

It seems to me therefore impossible to say after the Reformation, as a general proposition, that voluntary separations were contrary to the policy of the law. It certainly was perfectly true that inasmuch as the whole jurisdiction on the subject of marriage remained vested in the Cts. Christian . . . deeds of separation remained forbidden, that is, were treated as of no avail by the Ecclesiastical Law; & in that sense alone could it continue to be rightly said that separation was contrary to the policy of the law (LORD WESTBURY, C.).—HUNT v. HUNT (1862), 4 De G. 2145. By a deed of separation dated in Dec. 1862, a husband & wife agreed to live separate & apart, the husband to allow the wife an annuity of £200 for their joint lives & twelve months after the husband's death if the wife survived him. The trustee of the deed covenanted with the husband that the wife should not molest him, etc., & that she should not seek to compel him to live with her again, or "bring any citation in the Divorce Ct. for the restitution of conjugal rights." The annuity had been duly paid. The wife had commenced proceedings in the Divorce Ct. for a restitution of conjugal rights. Thereupon the husband filed his bill for an injunction to restrain the wife from further proceedings in the Divorce Ct. On motion for the injunction:—Held: the wife ought to be restrained from further proceedings until the hearing, the deed not having been impeached, & injunction granted, with liberty for her to file a cross-bill to impeach the deed, or as she should be advised, without filing it in the name of a next friend.—KITCHIN v. KITCHIN (1869), 19 L. 2150. Effect of—Separation agreement avoided.]—The Ct. of Ch. had jurisdiction to enforce payment of maintenance due to a wife under a separation agreement. This was not equivalent to a decree for alimony or a separation, so as to be an invasion of the jurisdiction of the Spiritual Ct. The parties might, whenever they thought fit, come together again, & then the agreement would be no longer binding.—ANGIER v. ANGIER (1718), Gilb. Ch. 152; Prec. Ch. 496; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 150; 25 E. 2151. —— ——.]—O. leaves her husband's (B.'s) house, commences a suit in Ecclesiastical Ct. for divorce, & files a bill in Chancery for payment of her separate annuity. All matters in difference referred to arbn.; & the award made a rule of ct. by consent. B., the husband, obtains an order of ct., which, without setting aside the award, partly does away the effect of it, by which means the records of ct. are made contradictory. B., upon this, takes possession of a house which the award had given to his wife, & she goes there to protect her property. B. then pretends a reconciliation, & takes an exception to suit in Ecclesiastical Ct. on that ground, but exception disallowed. O. files another bill, praying benefit of award: sentence of Ecclesiastical Ct. received as admissible, but not conclusive, evidence of non-reconciliation, & decree according to prayer of bill. Chancellor states general doctrine to be clear, that reconciliation after separation entirely does away the effects of it; but here no reconciliation. 2156. —— ——.]—By a marriage settlement certain stock belonging to the wife was assigned to trustees upon trust to pay out of the income thereof £50 a year to the husband for his life, & the residue of the income to the wife for her separate use; there were certain trusts to the issue of the marriage, & in default of issue all the property was to be reassigned to the wife in the event of her predeceasing her husband, but if the husband survived the wife he was to have one-half of the income for life, & the wife was to have power to appoint the whole of the capital by will, &, in default of appointment, one-half of the whole property was to go to the husband & the other half to the wife's next of kin. Certain shares, also belonging to the wife, were not included in the settlement, but were placed in the name of the husband. Shortly after the marriage the husband & wife separated, & a deed of separation was then executed, whereby the husband transferred the shares to a trustee for the wife for her separate use & covenanted not to molest her, the trustee covenanting to indemnify the husband against the wife's debts during the separation. It was also provided that the trusts of the settlement should still subsist, notwithstanding the deed of separation. Subsequently the husband & wife renewed their cohabitation & afterwards discontinued it, & again renewed it at various times. Ultimately, the trustee refused to continue the payments, under the separation deed, without the direction of the ct., & thereupon the wife instituted a suit to enforce the trusts of the deed, &, so far as might be necessary, those of the settlement:—Held: inasmuch as the effect of the recohabitation was to render the husband liable for the wife's debts, the chief consideration for the deed had failed, & the husband was entitled to the shares assigned under it; but with respect to the stock it was still subject to the trusts of the marriage settlement.—O'MALLEY v. BLEASE (1869), 20 L. A decree for judicial separation was made, & the wife took possession of the furniture. Subsequently the husband & wife resumed cohabitation, & the husband became a bkpt. The wife then filed a bill praying the execution of the trusts of the deed, or, in the alternative, for her equity to a settlement out of the debt. A demurrer, for want of equity, by the husband's trustee in bkpcy. on the ground, first, that the deed was not a settlement but a mere separation deed annulled by the resumption of cohabitation; & secondly, that the debt, being a legal chose in action of the wife's before marriage, belonged to the husband, was overruled.—RUFFLES v. ALSTON (1875), L. By a deed of separation a husband & wife agreed to live separately for the rest of their lives, & the husband covenanted to pay to the wife a sum of 15*s.* per week, & to permit her to have the custody of the children of the marriage, wholly freed from his authority, as if she were a feme sole. The marriage was afterwards dissolved on the ground of the wife's adultery:—Held: the husband's agreement to permit his wife to have the custody of the children ought not to be enforced, & the terms of the deed of separation ought to be varied by reducing the amount of the weekly payment to the wife from 15*s.* to 10*s.*—JUMP v. JUMP (1883), 8 P. Shortly after the separation she committed adultery, & in Nov. 1882, a decree for dissolution of the marriage was made absolute. In Apr. 1883, the husband obtained leave to present a petition to vary the deed, on payment of all arrears up to that time. There were three children of the marriage who were living with the husband. A petition having been presented, the matter was referred to the registrar, who reported that the wife had no means of support, & that the husband's income was about £270 a year:—Held: the case was not to be treated as one of alimony, but was one in which the ct. had a discretion as to the amount of allowance which ought to be made to the wife under all the circumstances; & having regard to the circumstances, & the conduct of the wife in the suit, the husband ought to be allowed to retain one-half of the allowance provided by the deed.—CLIFFORD v. CLIFFORD (1884), 9 P. He afterwards found that she was living with co-resp. under petitioner's name. He thereupon petitioned to have the marriage dissolved, & a decree nisi was pronounced, which was in due course made absolute. In 1874 the marriage was dissolved by reason of resp.'s adultery:—Held: on a revision of the settlements petitioner was not precluded by the deed of separation from asking for a larger allowance out of the wife's settled property than that which was secured to him by the deed.—BENYON v. BENYON & O'CALLAGHAN (1876), 1 P. For some years previously the parties had been living apart under a deed of separation, by which the husband covenanted to pay the wife £65 a year for the support of herself & her children, of which it had been agreed that she should have the custody. The husband, on obtaining the divorce, applied to the ct. for the custody of the children, & for a cancellation of the deed of separation:—Held: the husband should have the custody of the children, but should continue to pay to his late wife for her own support the sum of £26 a year out of the amount covenanted to be paid to her in the deed of separation.—HALL v. HALL (1902), 22 N. Under the agreement, the father was entitled to access to the child only while it was in the mother's custody & control; & in the absence of any stipulation therefor in the agreement, the mother was not guilty of any breach of its provisions by remaining in the room in her house in which the father was permitted to see the child during the times of the father's visit.—Re M. The exors. handed over to Mrs. K. the certificates of the shares, but did not transfer them, & they paid over to her the cash balance of the residue. After this a call was made on the shares which the exors. were compelled to pay. Mrs. K. refused to indemnify them, & they brought this action against her to enforce indemnity:—Held: (1) if Mrs. K. had been a feme sole, she would have been liable to refund at the suit of the exors., for that the liability on the shares did not constitute a debt at the time of paying away the residue, & though the exors. would have had no right to call on the residuary legatee to refund for payment of a debt of which they had notice when they paid away the residue, they did not lose the right to refunding by paying it away with notice of a liability which had not become a debt; (2) Mrs. K. who at the time of action brought had separate estate, though she was restrained from anticipation, was liable to be sued for refunding, for Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 1 (2), which makes a married woman having separate estate liable to be sued "in contract, or in tort, or otherwise," makes her liable to be sued on any ground on which a feme sole could be sued. 2203. —— Enforcement—As if given by next friend.]—(1) Where an injunction is wrongly granted, an undertaking as to damages given by pltf. is equally enforceable whether the mistake was in point of law or in point of fact.

In such a case the ct. has no discretion to refuse an inquiry as to damages unless the damages alleged would be too remote if deft. were suing in respect of them upon a breach of contract.

In such a case a husband deft. is not prohibited from enforcing an undertaking given by a wife pltf. by reason of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 12, debarring him from suing his wife in tort.

(2) A married woman who has given an undertaking as to damages since Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), will be dealt with on the same footing as that on which a married woman's next friend who had given such an undertaking would have been dealt with before the Act.—HUNT v. HUNT (1884), 54 L. 2217. Affidavit of documents—Joint affidavit—Must answer as to documents in possession of either.]—A husband & wife sued as co-pltfs. in respect of an alleged breach of trust by the trustees of their marriage settlement. The wife had a life estate for her separate use, & sued without a next friend. An order was made that pltfs. should file an affidavit stating "whether they or either of them" had in the possession or power "of them or either of them" any documents relating to the matters in question. They filed an affidavit admitting the possession of various documents, which they scheduled, & going on to say: "We have not now & never had, in our possession, custody or power, or in the possession custody or power of any other person or persons on our behalf, any deed, etc., other than & except the documents set forth in the said schedule":—Held: pltfs. must be ordered to file a further & better affidavit, for that an affidavit relating only to documents in the joint custody of the husband & wife did not comply with the order, & the order was right in requiring them to answer as to documents in the possession of either of them.—FENDALL v. O'CONNELL (1885), 29 Ch. 2225. Judgment drawn up in personal form—No power to amend—R. S. C., 1883, Ord. 28, r. 11.]—Pltfs. signed judgment in default of appearance against deft. a married woman sued in respect of her separate estate. By mistake the judgment was drawn up in the ordinary form of a personal judgment against deft. instead of in the appropriate form laid down by the Ct. of Appeal in Scott v. Morley, No. 1469, ante. Pltfs. having taken out a summons for leave to amend the judgment so as to follow the form of judgment prescribed in the case of a judgment against a married woman upon a contract made during coverture, a master & a judge at chambers declined to make any order upon it :—Held : pltfs. were proposing not to make a correction in the judgment but to substitute one form of judgment for another, & above rule had no application to the case.

The form of order was settled in Scott v. Morley, No. 1469, ante. It proceeds upon the footing that there is no personal liability, but only what BOWEN, L.J. calls a proprietary liability in the case of a married woman (BUCKLEY, L.J.).—OXLEY v. LINK, [1914] 2 K. 2226. Personal liability.]—On July 25, 1901, an action for libel was commenced against deft., who in the writ & the pleadings was described as "a married woman." At that time a decree nisi had been made for the dissolution of deft.'s marriage. On Nov. 25, 1901, the decree was made absolute. On Oct. 30, 1902, the libel action was tried, when a verdict was found for pltf. with £5,000 damages, & the judge directed judgment to be entered accordingly.

Deft. applied for a new trial, & in June, 1903, the Ct. of Appeal ordered a new trial, unless pltf. would consent to reduce the damages to £1,500. To this pltf. afterwards consented, & the judgment was on July 19 amended accordingly, but the date of Oct. 30 was not altered. The judgment as drawn up was in the ordinary form of a judgment against an unmarried woman, instead of in the form of judgment against a married woman in respect of her separate estate, as settled by the Ct. of Appeal in Scott v. Morley, No. 1469, ante.

The £1,500 not having been paid, pltf. on July 28 served a bkpcy. notice on deft. claiming payment of the £1,500, with interest thereon from Oct. 30, 1902. In the notice the creditor gave as her address an hotel in London where she was temporarily residing. She was in the habit of stopping at that hotel, but did not permanently retain a room there. On Aug. 4, the last of the seven days limited for compliance with the notice, the creditor at 10.15 a.m. went away from the hotel, leaving no address behind her. She went to Newhaven & thence to France, where she remained till the end of Sept. The debtor did not comply with the bkpcy. notice, & on Aug. 24 the creditor presented a bkpcy. petition against her founded on the judgment debt & the act of bkpcy. committed by non-compliance with the bkpcy. notice, & on this petition a receiving order was made.

It was objected by the debtor that the judgment was in a wrong form as a judgment against a deft. who was described in it as "a married woman" :—Held : inasmuch as at the date of the trial of the action deft. was unmarried, & a judgment could have been obtained against her creating a personal debt, the objection to the judgment was one of form only, & the Ct. of Bkpcy. had no power to go behind the judgment. —Re BEAUCHAMP, Ex p. BEAUCHAMP, [1901] 1 K. 2244. Applicability of proceeding.]—Judgment having been signed in an action against a married woman, execution upon which was limited to her separate estate not subject to any restraint upon anticipation, it was sought to attach in execution a sum of money recovered by her as damages in an action against the garnishee, & for which the judge at the trial had directed judgment to be entered for her:—Held: (1) the money could be attached; (2) the fact that judgment in the action against the garnishee was not in fact entered until after the commencement of the garnishee proceedings did not affect the right of pltf. to a garnishee order.—HOLTBY v. HODGSON (1889), 24 Q. 2282. —— —— —— —— —— ——.]—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 12, provides that every woman, whether married before or after this Act, shall have in her name against all persons whomsoever, including her husband, the same civil remedies, & also, subject as regards her husband, to the proviso hereinafter contained, the same remedies & redress by way of criminal proceedings, for the protection & security of her own separate property, as if such property belonged to her as a feme sole, but, except as aforesaid, no husband or wife shall be entitled to sue the other for a tort. In an action founded upon this sect. a wife sought an injunction to restrain her husband from entering into or otherwise trespassing upon a house, which formed the matrimonial home, & was her own separate property. There was evidence that the conduct of the husband & his cruelty to his wife was such that the family, consisting of the wife & her two children by a former husband, could not possibly live together, & that unless the husband were restrained from entering the house its value to the wife would be seriously diminished, & she would be obliged to sell it:—Held: an interim injunction ought to be granted restraining the husband until trial of the action from entering into or upon the house or otherwise interfering with pltf.'s possession thereof.—SHIPMAN v. SHIPMAN, [1924] 2 Ch. 140; 93 L. 2284. Action for trespass—Stranger entering house with authority of husband.]—A married woman in sole occupation of a house bought by her out of her own earnings, since Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (c. 93), can now after Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), sue alone, without her husband, in an action for trespass, a person who has entered such house against her will, though he did no injury to the house & entered it with the authority of her husband, but for a purpose unconnected with the husband's desire to live with his wife.

In an action by the wife against her husband for the wrongful detention of the chattels:—Held: the action could be maintained by the wife without joining the trustees of the settlement as parties.—HEALEY v. HEALEY, [1915] 1 K. e. Injunction—Interference with house separate property of wife.]—A woman was possessed of a licensed public-house in which she lived & carried on business. On her marriage the house & business remained her separate property, & the husband agreed not to interfere with the business. The husband lived in the house with the wife. Subsequently he ill-treated her, & systematically interfered with the business, & acted as if he was the owner of it, to the serious detriment of the business. On an originating summons brought by the wife against the husband under M. W. P. Act, 1882, s. 17, an order was made declaring the wife entitled to the property, & restraining the husband from interfering with the business, but no order was made preventing the husband from entering the house.—GAYNOR v. GAYNOR, [1901] I. therefore, discharged a rule to set aside a verdict obtained upon that ground.

There is not such a common interest between a husband & wife in property, created by the relation of marriage, that the wife cannot by law be guilty of a trespass upon it. Replication, that before suit the marriage of pltf. & deft. was dissolved by the absolute decree of the Ct. of Divorce & Matrimonial Causes. On demurrer:—Held: the replication was bad: for the action did not lie, as the wife's inability to sue did not arise merely from the necessity of joining her husband in an action for an assault, but from the rule that husband & wife are one person in law.—PHILLIPS v. BARNET (1876), 1 Q. 2296. Right to.]—A wife who had obtained a decree for judicial separation against her husband claimed certain furniture in his house as her separate property, & applied for an order that he should deliver it up to her. The husband denied that the furniture was her separate property:—Held: under Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 17, the wife was entitled to an inquiry by the registrar as to whether the furniture was her separate property.—PHILLIPS v. PHILLIPS (1888), 13 P. A decree annulling the marriage having been granted upon the wife's petition, she presented a "petition to restore dower," the application being referred to the registrar under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 17.

Upon the report of the registrar as to the facts & figures. SUB-SECT. 3.—HOW PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE GOVERNED.

See R. S. C. Ord. 78, r. 1 (d); Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), 1858 (c. 108), 1859 (c. 61), 1860 (c. 144), 1864 (c. 44), 1866 (c. 32), 1873 (c. 31), 1878 (c. 19), 1884 (c. 68), 1907 (c. 12); Divorce Amendment Act, 1868 (c. 77); Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), ss. 176–200; Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1924.

2317. Whether rules of Supreme Court applicable.]—In a petition by a husband for dissolution of marriage, petitioner applied for an order that resp., who was a minor, should make the usual affidavit as to documents. The only issue in the suit was that of adultery:—Held: (1) as Mayor v. Collins (1890), 24 Q. B. D. 361 turned upon the rules of the Supreme Ct., it was not applicable, since by Ord. 68, r. 1 (d), those rules do not apply to proceedings for divorce.

Qu.: whether an order for discovery cannot be made against an infant in proceedings for divorce.

(2) In the present case an order ought not to be made, for that discovery ought not to be required from a party to divorce proceedings when it is sought for no other purpose than to prove such party guilty of adultery.

Discovery was enforced, both in the Ecclesiastical Cts. & in the Ct. of Chancery, long before parties to suits in those Cts. were competent witnesses in such suits, & the statute [Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869 (c. 68)] in question does not, in truth, relate to discovery at all. A very little reflection will show that, in suits for dissolution of marriage, discovery, whether by interrogatories or affidavit of documents, may be perfectly consistent with the provisions of that Act. In every such suit the marriage of the parties has to be proved; discovery addressed to that subject may be wanted, &, if wanted, is clearly permissible. Again, in a wife's suit for dissolution on the ground of adultery & cruelty or desertion, discovery as to these last matters is equally permissible. On the other hand, adultery being an ecclesiastical offence, & the recognition of this state of the law by the Legislature being obvious from the prohibitory words in the statute, it would be wrong to compel discovery by means of interrogatories, the object of which is to obtain answers tending to show that the person interrogated has been guilty of adultery (LINDLEY, L.J.). —REDFERN v. REDFERN, [1891] P. 139; 60 L. 2318. —— Where no express provision in Divorce Court Rules.]—The Rules of the Divorce Ct. must not be taken as exhaustive, & where they fail to meet any particular case the Ct. may follow the rules of the Supreme Ct., notwithstanding the provision of Ord. 68, r. 1, that they shall not affect the procedure or practice in proceedings for divorce & other matrimonial causes, except where expressly provided.

So, in a case where a wife petitioner was suing in formâ pauperis for a divorce, on the ground of her husband's adultery & cruelty, & resp. was of unsound mind, & confined as a pauper lunatic in an asylum, the ct. in the absence of any express provision in rule 196 of the Divorce Ct. Rules applicable to the particular case:—Held: the practice laid down for the other Divisions of the High Ct. by Ord. 13, r. 1, ought to be followed, & adjourned the case in order that petitioner might apply that the official solr. or some other suitable person might be appointed as guardian ad litem to such resp.

A wife petitioned in formâ pauperis. The husband was a lunatic not so found by inquisition. The husband was served with the petition in the presence of the medical superintendent & an attendant at a pauper lunatic asylum where he was confined. No appearance was entered. On the petition coming on for hearing:—Held: an adjournment ought to be granted that a guardian ad litem might be appointed to resp.—GILES v. GILES, [1900] P. 17; 69 L. J. P. 26; 81 L. 2319. ——.]—(1) Divorce Ct. has an inherent jurisdiction to order separate trials of different issues in a matrimonial suit in order to ensure that equal justice may be done between all parties. In the absence of any precise rule of practice in the Divorce Rules or statutes, the Ct. may be guided by the Rules of the Supreme Ct. e.g. Ord. 36, r. 7. The jurisdiction should be exercised sparingly & on the principle that so far as possible no disadvantage should be imposed on any particular party to the proceeding.

(2) The right to apply for separate trial of an issue or issues belongs to all the parties to a suit indifferently, & not to co-resps. only.—MYERS v. MYERS, CARPENDALE, RADFORD & THOM, [1918] P. 260; 87 L. J. P. 159; 119 L. T. 343; 34 T. L. R. 464; 62 Sol. Jo. 653.

2320. Practice of Ecclesiastical Courts followed—Proceedings other than to dissolve marriage.]—(1) By Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 22, it is enacted that in suits for judicial separation, the Ct. for Divorce shall proceed, & act, & give relief on principles & rules as nearly as may be conformable to those on which the Ecclesiastical Cts. gave relief, but subject to the provisions contained in the Act; & to the rules & orders under the Act; & by sect. 51 the ct., at the hearing of any suit or petition under the Act, has authority to make such order as to costs as to it may seem just. By rule 159 (1865), the ct. reserves to itself the power to refuse the wife her costs if the decision of the ct. is against her:—Held: although by the ordinary practice of Ecclesiastical Cts. the wife, unless she had a separate income, was entitled in every case to her costs of suit, rule 159, which varies from that practice, has been properly made, & gives a reasonable & lawful discretion to the ct. in the matter of costs.

2321. —— ——.]—By Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 22, "In all suits & proceedings, other than proceedings to dissolve any marriage, the ct. shall proceed & act & give relief on principles & rules which, in the opinion of the ct., shall be as nearly as may be conformable to the principles & rules on which the Ecclesiastical Cts. have hitherto acted & given relief." In a proceeding for a divorce a mensâ et thoro on the ground of cruelty, where the parties resided within its jurisdiction at the commencement of the suit, an Ecclesiastical Ct. would have granted relief irrespective of their domicil, & it would have made no difference that the necessity for protection arose in consequence of cruelty committed outside its jurisdiction, where the apprehension of further acts of cruelty remained. Petitioner for a judicial separation had been, before her marriage, a domiciled Englishwoman. Her husband's domicil was in Australia, where, after her marriage, she resided with him. Owing to cruelty committed by him while they were travelling in Italy, she sought the protection of her parents in England, & established a home for herself & her children in this country. He followed her here & required her to return to him with the children, which she was afraid to do owing to her apprehension of a repetition of the cruelty. At the commencement of the suit both parties were living within the jurisdiction:—Held: the ct., exercising the power of the Ecclesiastical Ct. under the sect., had jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

If the ct. grants a wife a judicial separation under such circumstances, it has also power to give her the custody of the children of the marriage.—ARMYTAGE v. ARMYTAGE, [1898] P. 178; 67 L. J. P. 90; 78 L. T. 689; 14 T. L. R. 480.

2322. Application of Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (c. 61)—To rules & orders already published.]—(1) The ct. is not in a position to deal with a petition for custody of children brought under sect. 4 of above Act until both parties are before the ct.

(2) The rules & orders already published do not apply to above Act.

(3) The ct. will not after a decree for judicial separation make an ad interim order for the custody of children under sect. 4 of above Act, except upon application made by petition.—STACEY v. STACEY (1860), 29 L. J. P. M. & A. 63; 8 W. R. 341.

2324. Power to make, alter & revoke rules & orders.]—(1) The judge ordinary has power to make & to alter or revoke rules & orders concerning the practice & procedure of the ct. without the concurrence of the other judges.

(2) A petition for an order for permanent maintenance, under Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 32, must be presented in accordance with rule 96, after the decree nisi, & before the decree absolute: & rule 98, which requires resp. to file an answer to it on oath, is a binding rule with which the ct. will not dispense except upon special grounds. The fact that it appears on the face of the petition that petitioner has a separate income, is not a ground on which the ct. will dispense with that rule.

The ct. must find out what is the ability of the husband & the fortune of the wife before it can act on the statute (per CUR.).—CHARLES v. CHARLES (1866), L. R. 1 P. & D. 260; 36 L. J. P. & M. 17; 15 L. T. 416.

(Ct. of Sess.) 716; 2 Fac. Coll. 511.—SCOT.

o. ——.]—Concealment by a woman from her husband at the time of their marriage that she was pregnant to another man entitled the husband to have the marriage declared null & void.—STEIN v. STEIN, [1914] S. C. 903.—SCOT.

p. ——.]—The fact that a woman, who is at the time pregnant, has brought about her marriage to her husband either by fraudulently inducing him to believe that he is the cause of her pregnancy, which is in fact due to another, or by fraudulently concealing from him the existence of such a condition of pregnancy, does not afford the husband a ground for obtaining a decree of nullity of marriage.—LANG v. LANG, [1921] S. C. 44; 58 Sc. L. R. 38.—SCOT.

PART XIII. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 2.—A.

2329 i. Grounds for granting relief.]—Where consummation of the marriage is, on the part of the husband, a practical impossibility, the wife is entitled to a decree of nullity of marriage.—P. (OTHERWISE C.) v. P. (1905), 11 B. C. R. 369.—CAN.

2329 ii. ——.]—A decree of nullity of marriage cannot be granted upon evidence of wilful persistent refusal to submit to marital intercourse alone, it is necessary to prove facts from which an inference of incapacity can be drawn. The only ct. in which such a decree can be validly granted, is that having jurisdiction over the domicile.—BARNES v. BARNES (1921), 63 D. L. R. 680; 14 Sask. L. R. 505.—CAN.

2329 iii. ——.]—Wilful wrongful refusal of marital intercourse does not in itself justify the ct. in annulling a marriage, unless such refusal has continued for a long enough period, which has been fixed at three years, to raise the inference that the refusal arises from incapacity.—K. v. K., [1921] 1 W. W. R. 1072; 57 D. L. R. 746.—CAN.

2329 iv. ——.]—Permanent & incurable impotency, existing at such time & of such nature as to render complete & natural sexual intercourse between the parties practically impossible is a good ground for annulment of marriage. Impotency has been taken to mean physical & incurable incapacity from entering into the marriage, that is, incapacity to consummate the marriage.—BIRENDRA, ETC. v. HEMLATA, ETC. (1920), I. L. R. 48 Calc. 283.—IND.

2331 i. Impotence must exist at time of marriage.]—The wilful, persistent & wrongful refusal of the wife to allow marital intercourse is not of itself sufficient in law to justify a decree declaring the marriage a nullity. To justify such decree something must be shown from which it can be inferred that the wrongful refusal resulted from incapacity or impotence existing at the time of the marriage; & such wrongful refusal, though wilful & persistent, is not of itself sufficient for that purpose.—B. v. B., A.-G. FOR SASKATCHEWAN INTERVENER, [1921] 3 W. W. R. 558.—CAN.
